"I must learn how to draw." Ingres was past sixty when he made that statement. van Gogh, nearing the end of his tragic life, wrote "I shall have to learn to draw a figure in a few lines..."

Emile Zola admonished Cezanne to "become a workman."

And so thruout the artist's life he constantly inquires and searches for a "better way" to make a statement.

Early in her career Kaethe Kollwitz abandoned color for black and white - "I find that I must try to keep everything to a more abbreviated form . . . so that all of the essentials are strongly stressed and the inessentials almost omitted."

The artists mentioned above produced work as personal as their signatures.

The lyrical line of an Ingres is contrasted with the staccato strokes of van Gogh's reed pen. Using the flat side of charcoal, Kollwitz revealed the sureness of her draftsmanship by omissions and economy of line.

This exhibition of artists working in our area will also reveal the extent of their own personal shorthand. The medium by which they choose to express themselves comes about by knowledge thru experimentation and search for the one best suited to their own temperament.

My thanks to all of these artists who responded to my request to make this show possible.
