

UH educating growing area with two outlying institutes

By BILL MACFADYEN
of The Daily Cougar staff

To meet the intellectual needs of the area's ever-increasing population, the University of Houston offers additional educational opportunities through the programs and services of its West Houston Institute and The Woodlands Institute.

Founded in 1980, the two off-campus institutes offer a limited number of academic courses to students residing in rapidly-developing outlying areas of the city.

The institutes offer graduate courses and upper-level undergraduate courses in primarily the business and educational fields, although a number of courses in a variety of subjects are offered each semester, Gordon said.

The Woodlands Institute, which serves northern Harris and southern Montgomery counties, offers undergraduate courses in English, political science and business technology, and graduate courses in management and economics.

The Woodlands Institute is housed on the second floor of the Wharf Mall in the Woodlands. Because no classroom facilities are available at the present location, classes are conducted at nearby McCullough and Klein Forest High Schools, Janelle Hightower, institute administrative secretary, said.

Hightower said a possible move to a larger facility could be expected "within 14 months," but she added that all plans are tentative.

A proposal to develop a campus at The Woodlands has been prepared and submitted to the Coordinating Board of the Texas College and University System.

Administrators have predicted that the new campus, if approved and funded, could be expected to serve 1,000 students as early as 1985. According to UH System plans, a full academic program would be offered to 3,000 students in 1989.

While The Woodlands Institute struggles with growing pains, the West Houston Institute has relocated to a new, 17,000-square foot facility on Park 10 Place off Interstate 10. The institute houses both the institutional services and administrative offices.

Institute Director Lois Phillips said the administration hopes the additional space will allow expansion of course offerings at the West Houston location as early as the spring 1983 semester.

The West Houston Institute offers undergraduate and graduate courses in business and education similar to those offered at The Woodlands Institute. Undergraduate courses include English, political science and psychology; graduate courses include economics and accounting.

Students enrolled at the institutes have the same privileges and services as central campus students, Gordon said. Institute students have access to the M.D. Anderson Library, the University Bookstore, the Health Center and other student support services, he said.

Two men are stabbed in Wednesday attacks

By RANDY DAVIDSON
of The Daily Cougar staff

UH custodian Julian Flores was stabbed in the chest early Wednesday morning while working in the Harry Fouke Athletic Building. He was listed in stable condition after treatment at the Hermann Hospital emergency room, Capt. Ray Stevens of the UH Police Department said.

Flores was robbed of his wallet and stabbed about 6 a.m. by a man who police said then robbed a student at knifepoint in the men's locker room of Hofheinz Pavilion. Stevens said the man was chased by his second victim, Arthur Johnson, and another student but he escaped after stealing a bicycle from a building on campus. The bicycle was later recovered by police.

Johnson was cut on the arm by the suspect and was treated at the Health Center, Stevens said. He was robbed of his wallet and his watch.

Stevens described the suspect as a 24-year-old black man, 5 feet 11 inches tall and weighing approximately 155 pounds. The suspect was wearing a blue shirt and blue shorts at the time of the assaults, Stevens said.

Stevens said the police believe they know the suspect's identity, but declined to release his name. The suspect is not a UH student, Stevens said. He said police are searching for the man, and added that the suspect lives just north of the campus.

A warrant has been obtained for the suspect's arrest, and bond has been set at $50,000 for the suspect, who is believed to have a police record, Stevens said.

In a Wednesday evening telephone interview from the hospital, Flores said the suspect had drawn the knife in order to take Flores' wallet, but dropped the wallet as he fled the scene. Because the incident occurred so early in the morning, few people were in the building at the time, Stevens said.

Flores has not yet been interviewed by UHPD, so their reports on the incident have not been completed, Stevens said.

The escalator walk

As another semester starts up, the escalators break down. The Agnes Arnold Hall transit system, since its installment in 1967, has run up a long tradition and bad reputation with students and university employees alike.

'Same old story' Why the escalators don't run

By MICHAEL MONSON
of The Daily Cougar staff

On Monday, custodians cranked up the escalators in Agnes Arnold Hall for use by the thousands of UH students attending classes this fall.

They didn't work.

To returning students, this breakdown comes as no surprise. Walking up the escalators is a tradition almost as old as the building, which was completed in 1967. This year, though, the tradition has a new twist — if enough students are walking on a down escalator, giggles can be heard as the escalator starts to move under their combined weight.

Why don't the escalators work?

Tom Cobb, owner of Consolidated Elevators, the company contracted by the UH Physical Plant to maintain the escalators and all the elevators on campus, offered several reasons:

"It's because of the people that ride them. They're a bunch of animals and can't ride them like human beings. If you went over there, you'd see their big butts up there riding the handrails."

Cobb also insisted the escalators were not designed properly in the first place. "Glass escalators should not be used outdoors. The moisture is just hanging there (at Agnes Arnold). The whole place is soaking wet. So of course the rollers rust."

"They never will run right," Cobb said, "and never have since the day they went in. This is a problem that has existed for more than ten years. Those things are more trouble than all the elevators on that campus put together. There is nothing we can do about it."

Cobb explained that 90 percent of the shut-down time is due to trouble with the handrails. "We put new handrails in two years ago," he said. "And they're almost worthless now. The regular life-span of the average handrail is 10 years. All it takes is one kid riding it and it shuts down. I've seen kids reach out and stop it with their hand, because they knew they could do it."

"They were just designed poorly," Cobb concluded. "Anything you put in a college or school should be designed for endurance. I've suggested to Paul Postel (manager of maintenance for the UH Physical Plant) that they just pour in concrete and make stairs out of them."

Randy Wilkinson, sales manager for Westinghouse Elevators, the company that built the Agnes Arnold Hall escalators, said, "Obviously, the problem is they haven't been taken care of and maintained properly." Wilkinson said no one currently employed by Westinghouse worked for the company at the time the escalators were built. Nor was Wilkinson aware of the escalators' existence.

Kenneth Bentsen, the architect who built Agnes Arnold Hall and Philip G. Hoffman Hall, which has no escalators, said, "We worked closely with the manufacturer when we constructed the building. It was the state-of-the-art in escalators at that particular time."

Wayne TeVault, director of Architectural and Engineering Services for UH Facilities Planning and Construction, said, "It's the same old story: the brickmason says he laid the bricks straight but the concrete was poured crooked. The concrete pourer said he did his job right but the building wasn't designed properly. Then the architect claims it's the fault of the construction company. You can never ultimately know the truth of such a situation."

TeVault did admit, "One thing is true, those escalators have been causing problems since they were put in and that's a fact of life for every escalator that's been put in anywhere."

"At the time Agnes Arnold Hall was built," TeVault continued, "They seemed to be the answer and were very popular."

TeVault said he wasn't around when Agnes Arnold Hall was built and would "think long and hard before I'd put another escalator in a building rather than an elevator."

UC to get electronic news board

The University Center will soon feature an electronic news board. Associate Dean of Students, UC Director William Scott said the board will display an eight-minute program that will include campus messages, advertising, news, weather and sports. The board will be placed in front of the new sales area located on the first floor of the UC. Scott said the board will arrive about Sept. 15. He added that a committee will be established to accept requests for messages that will be displayed on the board. The new sales area will open sometime between Sept. 15 and Oct. 1, Scott said.

Task force revising honesty policy

The Academic Honesty Policy Task Force met with Provost George Magner Tuesday to discuss proposed revisions of the Academic Honesty Policy. The revised document will outline university policies relating to dishonest student practices, such as cheating. The current policy was written in 1970. Assistant Provost Dr. Guadalupe Quintanilla is chairwoman of the task force.

AEC to fund educational projects

The Academic Enrichment Council, a Students' Association committee, has a $5,000 budget for its 1982-83 allocations. The council, comprised of one faculty and five student members, allocates funds to student groups and individuals for travel, projects, equipment and other expenses. Groups or individuals that need funds for educational projects may contact the SA office at 749-1366. Past AEC-funded projects include student trips to conventions and symposiums, visiting speakers and student research grants.

Formal sorority rush starts Sept. 12

The University Panhellenic Council is sponsoring formal sorority rush beginning Thursday, Sept. 12. A rush information center will be located in front of the University Center and interested students may sign up Sept. 2, 3 and 7 from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m. There is a $10 fee for each woman attending rush parties. Formal parties are Sept. 9-12. Final selections by both the sororities and prospective members will be made Sept. 12.

Night students' office opening

By MICHAEL MONSON
of The Daily Cougar staff

Beginning next week, staff in the Mission Control Center in the University Center Satellite will offer campus services to evening students.

The office, a new service of the UH Student Life Division, will be open Mondays and Tuesdays from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m.

Interim Dean of Students Gerald Osborne said the service is "an attempt to try and organize all the student services in the Student Life Division so it will be more accessible to night students."

Osborne said the division wanted to be able to give night students a "very clear" idea of where they could go to take advantage of Student Life services.

"We placed it in the Satellite," Osborne explained, "because we felt it was an easy location for most night students to get to. Most of the services of Student Life are in the periphery of the campus. We have found that the Satellite is the most central location to where most night classes are."

Student Life Division services are the Vice Chancellor, Dean of Students Office; the Career Planning and Placement Center; the Child Care Center; the Counseling and Testing Office; Handicapped Student Services; the Health Center; International Student Services; Parking; the UH Police Department; the A.D. Bruce Religion Center; Student Publications; Students' Association; Student Housing; Transportation; the Tutorial Program; the Upward Bound Program; and Veteran Services.

Osborne said the office will be staffed at first by the Dean of Students office and will serve as a referral service for night students. He said the person staffing the office will have access to all forms and information concerning Student Life services.

The office can be reached by calling 749-HELP.

Covering the solution

With the UH population once again on the upswing, the daily battle for parking spaces is becoming more intense.

We now have more than 38,000 people on the central campus at some point during each week, and the majority of these are commuters in single-passenger cars. Simple arithmetic, or a walk to one of the campus lots during rush hour, reveals the danger of maintaining only 14,000 parking spaces for all those cars.

Short-range solutions, such as graveling grassy areas, are exactly that — short range. Long-term answers, increasingly important in view of the constant administrative push toward expanding enrollment, will be found only through acquisition of expensive property or more efficient usage of property already owned.

The administration should be building upward, not building outward. Our campus is already notable for its array of massive parking lots and, while the area could hardly be considered "paradise," it would be a shame to pave over any more of it.

Parking garages not only use land economically, but they also provide more desirable parking spaces. To pay for a student parking garage, an additional contract parking fee could, and should, be established for those students who want to protect their cars from the elements, vandalism and theft.

It's time for the emphasis to shift from serving everyone poorly to serving at least some people well, and a student parking garage would be a fine start.

TIM BROOKOVER

Money panic

A high school friend phoned me one evening last month with the news that she had graduated from the University of Texas. When I asked about her plans, she laughed. She had decided to join the Peace Corps, and was leaving the next morning for two years in the Fiji islands.

Why? "Maybe when I get back, I'll be able to find a job," she explained, only partly in jest.

People are running scared because of the economy. Spiraling inflation and unemployment make everyday living even more difficult now, and the collapse of businesses and the depression of entire industries promise little hope for improvement in the near future. And it will take much more than smiles and empty pledges to convince the American people that things are going to get better.

Lack of money

Few things in contemporary living are more frightening than a lack of money. Money is becoming harder to earn and to keep, even as it becomes more vital to get more of it to maintain the status quo.

We live in Houston, which makes us luckier than many Americans. Houston has been portrayed as the wide-open boomtown, the shining city: more jobs, more opportunity, a better life. The city has played the part well — expanding, swelling, rising. But now we are discovering that Houston is not immune to today's economic problems. And still the migrants arrive — pilgrims in search of something, anything, better — expecting streets paved with gold and finding the potholes are here, too.

College students cannot remain insulated from the chilly economic conditions either, especially at the University of Houston where most of us are part of the work force. Many of us support not only ourselves, but families too. We are forced to worry about our paychecks, often more than we worry about our classes.

A hot topic

Any time and any place students gather the talk is of jobs. Job prospects are the hot topics of any conversation. At a college journalism conference I attended last spring in Washington, the seminars dealt with ethics, skill and the law. But the question everyone needed answered: "How hard is it to get a job?"

How will I find a job? What if I don't find a job? Will I have to move to find a job? Will my major secure me a job? How much money will my major guarantee? Am I in the wrong major? Should I change my major to get a better job? How quickly will I be able to advance and make more money? How much money will I have to make? Will the jobs be there when I graduate? Will I graduate too late?

Career decisions have become even more pressing, and even more a matter of strategy. It is important to ask questions, get answers and be concerned about the future, but for some, healthy concern has turned to unhealthy panic.

Everybody knows what 'it' is - hopefully

I am not one of those people who think the English language is being destroyed every time somebody uses the wrong word.

If a guy wants to say, "Hopefully it won't rain," I am not going to jump up and punch him in the mouth for using "hopefully" wrong.

I know what the guy means. He means he hopes it won't rain.

If a guy want to say, "The data is not yet in," I am not going to stomp on his foot and say, "The data are not yet in, you jerk."

There are bigger things to worry about. World peace. Acid rain. How "Dynasty" will turn out.

But I do get upset when people don't communicate at all. Which is why a few weeks ago, I criticized Coca-Cola for its new slogan: "Coke is it!"

It doesn't seem to mean anything. Could I go into a store and say, "Where do you keep the it?" or, "Do you have any cold it for sale?" Could I go into a hamburger joint and say, "One cheeseburger and a large it to go."?

Of course not. Shortly after my criticism, a large brown package arrived at my office. After ordering a copy clerk to throw his body on it for 10 minutes — a precaution I follow with all large brown packages — I opened it. It was from Coca-Cola and contained:

A six pack of Coke. This I gave away. I cannot be bought. Not for a lousy six-pack, anyway. If they had sent me six shares of Coca-Cola stock, I might have considered it.

Three press releases, five biographies, eight glossy photographs, three pages of sheet music, and a 24-page multi-colored book, all explaining the new Coke campaign.

One red and white T-shirt, size 46 Extra Large, that said: "Coke Is It!" on the front.

A note saying the T-shirt was so large because they heard I was a "big man" in journalism. I thought that was funny.

But I still had one question: Coke is what?

So I called Roy Stout, vice president of marketing research for Coca-Cola USA, at Coke's corporate headquarters in Atlanta.

Stout, whom everyone calls Dr. Stout, has a Ph.D. in economics and a wonderful accent, which he identified for me as a "way-back-deep-in-the-hills-of-West-Virginia" accent. He was very frank.

"Doc," I asked, "what does 'it' mean?"

"I had the same question," he chuckled. "We asked a lot of consumers in a lot of environments that question. And we found the blandness of it — it doesn't say what it is — is it's million and $300 million, Stout said. So if people had associated "it" with Communism or battery acid or fallen arches, Coke would have had to start all over.

As it turned out, Stout said, Coke rejected about five slogans before settling on the current one.

"We threw away 'Coke makes it better,'" he said. "I sort of thought that made a lot of sense. But it was too reminiscent of 'Things go better with Coke.'" Coke used that slogan in the '60s.

"And 'You've got a Coke coming to you.' That's another one that didn't make it," Stout said.

No one knows exactly why people like some slogans more than others, but Stout figures he spent about $200,000 testing the current batch. "In the final analysis, advertising is not a greatest strength."

Could I go into a hamburger joint and say, 'One cheeseburger and a large it to go.'?

To test the slogan, Stout wrote "Coke is it!" on a blank sheet of paper, handed it to people and asked them what it meant.

"You know what?" he said. "They all had an answer. They all believed it meant something."

People told Stout that "it" meant great refreshment, satisfying taste, and "a relaxing kind of habit."

"Also, and this was my biggest surprise, people associated 'it' with bigness, as in the largest selling," he said.

Coke was very happy. "I've got to tell you," Stout said, "a lot of people around here were worried."

I could see why. Over its lifetime, a major advertising campaign will cost between $200 science," Stout said. "It is an art."

I went back through the press releases to find out how Coke advertising started. According to legend, on May 8, 1886 John Styth Pemberton created Coke syrup in a three-legged brass pot in his backyard in Atlanta.

He took it down the street to Jacobs' Pharmacy, where it was combined with carbonated water and sold for five cents a glass.

The pharmacy painted a red and white sign on its door.

It said: "Drink Coca-Cola."

If you ask me, things have gone downhill from there.

Commentaries wanted!

Surely at one time or another after passing on a clever idea or insightful observation to friends, they've said to you, "That's great, you really ought to send it in."

You thought to yourself, sure, but where? And to whom?

Look no further. The Daily Cougar is ready and willing to accept commentaries from anyone on any subject to be prominently placed in the space above and to the right.

This section of the paper has been purposely set aside to be used by members of the UH community as a forum to express their ideas, thoughts and opinions.

As can be seen, the space is presently occupied by a nationally-syndicated columnist. But since we are a campus newspaper, wouldn't it be better if your peers knew what you had to say?

Don't be shy. You write it, and we'll most likely print it.

New film is a 'horror' story of CIA covert activities

By KELLEY GRIFFIN
of The Daily Cougar staff

A film showing next week in Houston is probably the summer's most frightening. There are no poltergeists, no giant insects, no intergalactic battles.

The main character is the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency. The stage for its finely detailed plots is Central America, Angola and Iran. "On Company Business" is a documentary of CIA actions in those regions which are frightening in their scope and their immunity from public scrutiny.

The film outlines the history of the CIA's operations in those regions — operations which included destabilizing governments through infiltrating media, student groups and labor, and in some cases, murder, according to CIA defenders, critics and victims interviewed in the film.

There is no narration in the three-hour film. It uses excerpts from interviews and Congressional hearings with individuals such as ex-CIA directors William Colby and Richard Helms, former AFL-CIO president George Meany, David Atlee Phillips, former head of CIA's Western Hemisphere operation, ex-agents John Stockwell, Phillip Agee and Victor Marchetti, the wife of the late Chilean president Salvador Allende and a mercenary soldier who was commissioned by the CIA to fight in Angola.

The film's director, Allan Francovich, said in an interview Wednesday that he spent from 1975 to 1980 compiling 150 hours of interviews and 50 hours of archive films.

"What I wanted to do was show the CIA's methods of operation," Francovich said. "If I had just focused on one dramatic example, people wouldn't have understood the scope of its operation."

The film also presents serious implications for CIA activities in the United States. In one scene Colby testifies before Congress, and admits the agency employs people on U.S. newspapers. When asked if there were agents in the national press services, Associated Press or United Press International, Colby paused, then said,

"I'd prefer to answer that in executive session."

He made the same request when asked if CIA agents were working for the national television networks. Information given in then-Secretary of State Henry Kissinger worked with the CIA to overthrow Allende's socialist government.

• Ex-director Helms, in a congressional hearing, stumbling executive session is not part of the public record.

Scenes from the film include:
• Former U.S. Ambassador to Chile Edward Korry telling how then-President Richard Nixon and over the fact that the agency did plot to murder Fidel Castro with a poison dart and telling a senator that if he wants to call it assassination, that's his business.

• Former CIA European labor

attache Paul Sakwa describing how the agency funneled large amounts of money to throw elections.

• Former CIA operative Richard Martinez telling of his work in the Brazilian labor movement in 1962-64 which helped destabilize the country's last freely-elected government.

• A Brazilian dissident, Angela Seixas, telling of hours of torture during which elaborate U.S. hardware was used.

The list could go on, and Francovich asserts the incidences are still going on, too.

Since the evidence presented in "On Company Business" comes from people who had parts in the events, it is virtually impossible to discredit the information, although disbelief is probably the immediate reaction.

"The film is so powerful because you hear about 50 CIA people tell you about year after year of these operations," Francovich said.

Francovich noted that the CIA's attempts to publicly discredit the film have not attacked the factual information, but have tried to portray him as "an international terrorist."

Because of its controversial nature, the film has not been popular with the television networks. (In the film, a former CBS executive, Sig Michelson, discusses how CBS already had a "relationship" with the CIA when he took over, and that he opted to continue that relationship, which included sending film from the CBS news desk to CIA headquarters upon request.)

After one showing, the film also was cancelled from additional showings on PBS. Francovich said he was told by someone from the New York PBS affiliate WNET that the film was too controversial. He said the manager of PBS in Washington made a public apology for the station's one-time showing of the film.

Francovich is trying to promote "On Company Business" city by city. It will play in Houston Tuesday, Sept. 7, at the River Oaks Theatre on West Gray.

"I'm determined to get as many people as possible to see it," he said. If Americans don't learn what the CIA is doing and "it is allowed to continue, it will soon be able to use the same methods inside of this country," Francovich said.

"The film shows that the targets of CIA actions, such as the Chilean government, were aware of what the CIA was trying to do. The secrecy is directed toward keeping us from knowing," he said.

He cited a recent law passed by Congress which prohibits Americans from giving the name of CIA agents in embassies. "That just stops the U.S. journalists from investigating, but the foreign journalists can still report it," he said. "You can't have a democracy unless there is knowledge."

An Important Notice To UH Community Personnel from your UH Police Department

Effective April 15, 1982, the Parking and Transportation Division was merged with the U of H Police Department. A reorganization of this section has been performed to provide more efficient and effective services to the members of the university community. The reorganization of this section has entailed the following changes:

The Transportation section has revised their procedures concerning the Cougar Car-Go program for students. Also, Carsharing and Carpooling Match Up programs have been designed for community members. Call 749-RIDE for more information. The filing and records keeping systems of the parking section have been updated to improve service.

For the Fall 1982 semester the Parking and Traffic regulations have been updated and will be distributed during registration. The following provisions have also been established:

- Resolving Unpaid Citations—faculty, staff, students or visitors having unpaid citations on file will be charged only the original rate of fine, not double the rate owed. This offer stands until August 31, 1982. Citations on file after this date will be assessed double the rate of fine.
- Stop Lists—Students having unpaid citations on file will be placed on stop lists. A stop will prevent registration for classes, obtaining transcripts or diploma and from being issued a decal for parking.
- Tow Lists—All violators having three unpaid citations on file will be notified via letter that an additional violation will place their vehicle on a tow list. Violators having four or more unpaid citations on file will be placed on a tow list and will remain on the list until citations are cleared.
- Faculty/Staff members having unpaid citations on file will be denied the issuance of a decal until citations are cleared.
- Plans are presently being designed to establish a towing lot on campus for vehicles impounded by the Police Department for illegal parking or from the tow list.
- Gated Faculty/Staff Lots—faculty/staff will be assigned to a specific gated lot. This lot designation will be punched out on the faculty/staff decal. If specified lot is full, parking will be permitted in any ungated faculty/staff lot or student lot.

- Effective July 19, 1982, the parking and transportation section will have the following operation schedule:
Monday-Thursday 8 a.m.-10 p.m.; Friday 8 a.m.-4 p.m.
Prior to July 19, 1982, office hours will be Monday through Friday 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.; Information Center Monday through Friday 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.
The Information Center on Entrance 1 will operate Monday through Friday 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.
- Effective with Fall Registration, All parking decals or permits will be displayed on the inside right front windshield (passenger side) within six inches of the lower right hand corner.
- Parking & Transportation Section is currently located in the General Services Building, Room 150, Entrance 17.
OBTAIN DECALS NO LATER THAN SEPT. 3
On Tuesday, September 7 enforcement actions will be taken.

Services set for Rouse

A memorial service is scheduled today in the A.D. Bruce Religion Center for Mrs. Sue Rouse, a 33-year faculty member at the UH College of Pharmacy, who died last week after a short illness.

Dr. Joseph P. Buckley, dean of the College of Pharmacy, will present the eulogy at the 4 p.m. service.

Rouse had been named professor emeritus of pharmacy this year following her retirement from teaching. She had been on the pharmacy faculty since 1949, for all but two of the college's 35-year history.

"The professional success of UH pharmacy students was due largely to Sue Rouse's teaching ability," Buckley said.

Donations to a memorial fund established in Rouse's honor may be sent to The Sue Rouse Memorial Student Fund, UH College of Pharmacy, 139 SR-II, 4800 Calhoun Blvd., Houston 77004.

This calculator thinks business. The TI Student Business Analyst.

If there's one thing undergrad business students have always needed, this is it: an affordable, business-oriented calculator. The Student Business Analyst. Its built-in business formulas let you perform complicated finance, accounting and statistical functions—the ones that usually require a lot of time and a stack of reference books, like present and future value calculations, amortizations and balloon payments.

It all means you spend less time calculating, and more time learning. One keystroke takes the place of many. The calculator is just part of the package. You also get a book that follows most business courses: the Business Analysts Guidebook. Business professors helped us write it, to help you get the most out of calculator and classroom. A powerful combination.

Think business. With the Student Business Analyst.
