We're Nearing The End Of The Row When U.S. Officials Publicly Defend Acts Of Violence

What Became Of Great Statesmen Who Once Served In The Senate Of The United States?

As the situation worsens at home and abroad and the low quality of statesmanship which has brought us to the bottom of the totem pole in domestic and world affairs becomes clear to even the most obtuse among us, people are beginning to show serious concern about what has happened to our national leadership.

What is the matter with members of Congress and what became of their political honesty, official integrity and vital interest in the survival of the Republic whose Constitution they solemnly swore to uphold?

This widespread perplexity is directed especially toward the United States Senate, our lawmaking court of last resort, which once served as a firm stop-gap to wild, irresponsible and ill-advised proposals originating in the House but which now outstrips that body in launching fuzzy, vicious and anti-American legislation the passage of which is distorting, twisting and perverting the original objectives of the American Constitution possibly beyond hope of reclamation.

Where are the counterparts of the Websters, the Clays, the Calhouns and other eminent statesmen whose vision, courage, wisdom and innate love of their own country shaped the nation's laws in the interest of justice, freedom and opportunity for individual achievement and among whose primary concerns were the preservation of the Constitution, the maintenance of the prestige and dignity of the United States abroad and the protection of the sovereignty and internal security of its citizens at home?

In our opinion, the answer to this agonized inquiry is partly general and partly specific.

In general, it is largely due to the wave of International Socialism which has swept over the globe and denuded the lawmaking bodies and parliaments throughout the world and stripped them of men of stature, of character and capacity for original thought and action. In a totalitarian concept of government, genius is heavily suppressed and only the small, the incompetent and the weak are permitted to rise to the top.

Specifically, intellectual rigor mortis set in in the United States Senate with the passage of the 17th amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of its members through direct vote of the people instead of by State legislative action as called for in the original Constitution.

Under the latter plan great care had usually been exercised in the selection of those chosen to fill this exalted office and up until the passage of the amendment, men of high standing, recognized mental stature and unchallenged ability dominated the Upper Chamber of the Senate.

With the passage of the 17th amendment, a trend developed in the various States to lower the qualifications of voters under the fallacious theory that the greater the number of riff-raff enticed to the ballot box, the more "democratic" the election process.

The overall result of these two tragic errors of judgment within a few years resulted in populating the Upper House of Congress with a new species of low-grade lawmakers whose principal qualifications for the job consisted of the triple assets of guts, gall and the gift of gab.

This is not to say that there are not a few dedicated, patriotic and able men in the Senate because there are but so tainted with International Socialism are the thought processes in the nation's capital that when one of these devoted public servants dares to enunciate the simple principles which the founding fathers set forth at the birth of the Republic, he is set upon as a reactionary, a fascist and an enemy of the people in the New World Order.

Briefly, International Socialism decimated the ranks of honest, God-fearing and freedom-loving legislators in many sectors of the world and the death-knell of statesmanship in the United States Senate was sounded when the thirty-sixth State of the American Union ratified the 17th amendment to the Constitution.

In order to gain a proper perspective of the case of the Alabama "Freedom Riders" and to bring into focus the inconceivable distortion of the functions of the Attorney General's office which attended the incident, it is necessary to give imagination full sway. Let us try to picture, for instance the spectacle of several bus loads of Ku Klux Klansmen from the South boldly driving into the Harlem District of New York with banners flying and with the "riders" flagrantly violating the customs and mores of the area, openly defying local officials to do anything about it and throwing their weight around all over the place. Let us further try to visualize the Attorney General of the United States rushing out like a knight in shining armor to defend these inciters of public violence and sending in 600 U.S. marshals to protect them from interference by objectors to the demonstration. Imagination will break down at this point, of course, because that could not happen; the machinery of government would simply not be operated in defense of White law violators and they would be summarily dealt with as they deserved to be. But that, in reverse, is exactly what happened in Alabama when Communist-directed agitators from New York barged into that State in droves with the announced purpose of smashing customs, practices and traditions which have prevailed among the peaceable and law-abiding people there for almost a hundred years. And instead of crushing this civil revolt against law and order instantly as he would have done in the case of a Ku Klux Klan invasion of Harlem, the Attorney General let it be known that his full sympathy was with the "Freedom Riders" and that the facilities of his office would be exercised for the protection of the black hoodlums in their hate march through the South.

When the weak-minded, irresponsible and unthinking element of the American people — which, unfortunately, includes a heavy segment of our current leaders of political, economic and social thought — are sold on an idea, they go hog-wild on the subject and don't let go until they have run it in the ground and broken it off.

They are in the category of sheep who must necessarily follow a bell-wether even if it means that they will eventually wind up on a bloody slaughter house floor.

In the matter of the racial-mixing propaganda which is now, and has been for a long time, riding this nation like a pestilence, the bell-wether is the Kremlin in Soviet Russia.

Every American with the mental equipment and reasoning power of a tadpole knows that long ago the Communists planted the idea in feeble and unstable minds in the United States that Southern Negroes were ill-treated and were being ground into the dirt by the cruelty and inhumanity of White barbarians determined to deny them the political, economic and social rights to which they were entitled.

This was a Soviet lie out of the whole cloth.

There was no "Negro Problem" in the South until the Communist apparatus created it and set it up as a vital and essential part of the Satanic conspiracy to foment trouble among the people of the United States and embitter them against each other, the better and quicker to take us over.

To the everlasting disgrace of the American people, this hellish

Millions of Americans Think it — The Southern Conservative Says It

Internationalism Which Has Gone Stark Raving Mad

The catch in the President's Youth Peace Corps is now out in the open.

The venture was going to be tried on a temporary basis and would cost the taxpayers practically nothing, as the "corpsmen" would live under primitive conditions in keeping with those in the country where they served.

Now it turns out that each corpsman will cost the taxpayers $15,000 and the President has asked Congress to make this ridiculous experiment in schoolboy diplomacy a permanent institution and he wants $40,000,000 as a starter.

It seems to us it would be more practical, instead, just to give these diplomatic boy scouts $15,000 each and let them stay home where they could be preparing themselves for a useful career at home and where they would not be exposed quite so openly to Communist infiltration.

Former Congressman Hamilton Fish of New York recently said of the proposed Peace Corps:

The proposal of President Kennedy to establish by executive order a Peace Corps . . . is internationalism gone stark raving mad.

President Kennedy's motives, I am sure, are unselfish, idealistic and sincere and backed by the best intentions. But unfortunately he does not think the problem through or anticipate its disastrous reactions. The so-called Peace Corps has nothing to do with peace except for its camouflage name. It is an extremely dangerous project emanating from the minds of one-worlders who have completely failed to foresee its dire consequences.

The advent of young Americans into Africa or Latin America would automatically open the gates of darkest Africa and other undeveloped nations to highly trained and dedicated Communist agents. It would be playing directly into the hands of Moscow . . .

That grand publication established by the great Benjamin Franklin, the Saturday Evening Post, is responsible for some of the soundest and most Conservative editorials of the present day but when it comes to the contents of the balance of the publication — Ye gods! We wish that when the Post feels moved to give its readers information about the South, it would for once — just once — employ a decent, responsible White Southerner to write the article. Surely the South where the Post has many readers is entitled to such a break instead of having its "problems" aired by integrationist riff-raff of both races.

Looking back to the Presidential campaign last fall, it is laughable to remember the fears in certain circles that if a Catholic were elected President the Pope would take over the White House the next day. Out of the scores of members of minority groups whom the President has appointed to high office, Catholics can almost be counted on one hand. So we can relax. Regardless of who may "take over" the White House we can be assured it won't be the Pope.

Our Evaluation of the New National Administration

Practically every writer in the country is trying to make an assessment of the new President and evaluate his aims and program for the Republic over which he now presides as President and we see no reason why we should not get into the act.

Briefly, we believe there is no fundamental difference between his ideologies and those of the three Presidents who have preceded him. We do think he is bolder and more forthright, however, and that his administration will see all the loose ends tied up and the objectives accomplished which were begun under Truman and Eisenhower.

We believe also that the strong man of the administration if not indeed the "strong arm" of it, is little Brother Bobby and that he is the man to watch.

He has all the traits of the true revolutionary, gleam in the eye and all, and, in our opinion, will be the Rasputin behind the scene who plays chess with the figures in higher echelons of the administration.

From a subscriber in New Orleans: "Take heart my friend when you get discouraged and think nothing is being accomplished. I remember years ago you were telling your readers about the Communist sympathy of officials of the National Council of Churches and no doubt many of your readers laughed. Today, many denominations have found out that you were right. They are either withdrawing from NCC or demanding that it mend its ways 'and get out of politics.'"

Mark up another small but significant gain for Mr. Khrushchev. The Senate Judiciary Committee of the Legislature of California recently approved legislation voiding racial restrictions in California real estate deeds. This means that any attempt by White people to live to themselves will be declared illegal. Assemblyman Clark Bradley, Republican of San Jose, sponsored this monstrosity.

There should be a law or a Constitutional provision requiring that a President of the United States remain in this country during his tenure of office. A domestic policy of "stay at home and mind your own business" would probably do more to restore harmonious relations between nations than all the "summit conferences" which could be held in a century.

When Secretary of State Dean Rusk went to Oslo recently it was reported in the press that he took sixty representatives from the State Department along with him. If he knew what he was going to say in Oslo why would it require 60 Federal payrollees to go along with him to say it?

There are few places on earth which are not swarming with representatives from Federal agencies in Washington. It would be interesting to know what the people of these countries actually think of sending these invading armies of small-time bureaucrats snooping and poking all over the place.

If Communists Take Over Dominican Republic Watch State Dept. Restore Recognition

Raphael Trujillo, strong man of the Dominican Republic, is dead.

There have been many versions of how he met his death and there probably will be many more but that he was killed on orders of Moscow will not be doubted for a minute by thinking persons. Who joined in the plot and who did not is also vague at this time and may never be known.

Anyway, Trujillo was one of the few, if not the only anti-Communist dictator, left in the Latin American countries and his assassination followed as a matter of course.

At the present time his son is claimed to be in power but in these days, sons, somehow, do not seem to reproduce whatever strong qualities their fathers may have represented, and it is more than likely that the Dominican Republic will sooner or later fall to the hands of the Communists.

If this should happen, it requires no great measure of wisdom and

It is pretty sickening the way we are constantly hearing about new "goals" for the United States as interpreted by personalities and "task forces" projected into the scene since the Kennedy inauguration. Committees and groups are constantly advising plain Americans like us what the new "goals" are for which Washington is striving. When we want to know what the American "goal" is, we just break out the Constitution and renew our belief in freedom as the ultimate objective of a Constitutional Republic and we don't need any peewee politicians to help us along this line.

foresight to know that when, and if, such regime is set up, the American State Department will hasten to restore recognition of the Republic which was withdrawn last year because Castro and some of his Latin American fellow Communists didn't like Trujillo.

We're Nearing the End

propaganda caught on in this country like wild fire and has exploded into a conflagration of unrest and hatred which even the nation's highest authorities may one day find it difficult to quench.

Crafty and vote-hungry politicians seized on it as a new and effective device for reaping a rich harvest of ballots for themselves and for their party; educational, religious and social service leaders saw in it new fodder for re-stoking their impoverished personal resources and as a fuel to rekindle the dying embers of their influence in their respective fields.

It was a program all made to order for the morally, politically and socially depraved among us and for years this slap-happy element of our citizenship has been riding high on a wave of black fanaticism to the end that their brains are so addled and their emotions so perverted on the subject that their thinking machinery has been put permanently out of repair.

It was an issue which was sensational and inflammatory and with an element of misdirected human appeal and, above all, it provided the ingredients for whipping up the baser passions of men and stirring to action the forces which fan revolutions against established order and conventions of civilized society.

As a result not only have the laws of nature been violated, conventions of decent society flouted and the nation's moral standards materially lowered but the disservice to the colored race has been so extensive and widespread that no corrective action of the foreseeable future could make atonement for the frightful wrong done these once lovable but simple and highly excitable people. For such is the Negro mentality that they see in all this organized agitation for their "rights," together with the flaunting of those of White people, merely a license for them to murder, rob and rape at will without fear of punishment. In this connection, crimes by Negroes are at an all-time high and it is universally agreed that in New York, Washington, Chicago, San Francisco and other metropolitan cities no White woman may appear at night on the streets alone except at the risk of her life.

Even in view of this artificially-created dilemma, however, the situation could still be handled through proper vigilance of local and State police authorities if backed up by strict jury verdicts and much of the harm overcome. Also there will probably always be a sufficient number of decent, fastidious and self-respecting White people to offset this lunatic fringe of racial deviates, in the matter of social practices.

But when the Attorney General of the United States lends his official sanction to Negro law violators and undertakes to personally guarantee safe conduct to incipient criminals in their planned raids on peace-loving and law-abiding communities, it is high time for an agonizing reappraisal of the whole messy situation and of our unnatural and degenerate attitude on the racial question.

Since he has never tried a case, faced a jury or even been in a court room, the Attorney General could not be expected to understand the legal ethics involved but the disgraceful Alabama fiasco is a serious reminder that somebody must firmly brief him on the duties of his office and whisper in his ear that the proper function of the legal arm of the American government is to prosecute, and not aid and abet vicious and deliberate interstate acts against the public peace.

Texas Editor Gives Us Credit For Trying Anyway

The following appeared recently in the El Paso, Texas, Times, under the heading of "Every Day Events" by the editor W. J. Hooten.

Decided Sunday to take a look at what that hard-hitting editor, Ida M. Darden, of the Southern Conservative, published in Fort Worth, was having to say.

I had not read her views very much since President Kennedy took office.

What she had to say in her issue for May is interesting, whether we agree with her or not. Here is her front page observation in part:

"Certainly the harassed young President of the United States is deserving of the deep sympathy of all the people in view of the many terrifying crises arising almost daily and in the face of which he seems helpless, frustrated and confused.

"Already he looks many years older than the youthful figure who was inaugurated on last January 20 and who appeared jaunty and confident as he took the oath to uphold the Constitution of the United States.

"His lack of maturity and his apparent inability to make decisions should not be held against him, however, because all this was brought out strongly and emphasized during the campaign and the voters, with their eyes wide open, chose him in spite of this unfortunate and serious handicap. So there is no point now in criticizing him for the lack of seasoned judgment which is so tragically essential in meeting and resolving the most serious problems which have perhaps ever confronted any American President in the life of the Republic.

"But what he certainly is to be blamed for is the low grade type of advisers he has drawn into his administration and for the small calibre of the men whose counsel he seeks.

"In the situations involving Cuba, Laos and other trouble spots, for instance, where sparks could be ignited which would set the world on fire, he consulted and conferred with incompetent and shoddy politicians from New York to Missouri to California, whose combined knowledge of military considerations would not equal that required to earn a buck private a promotion to the job of corporal.

"And in the background lurks a Harvard-ridden cabal of Presidential advisers who not only have no comprehension whatever of intricate diplomatic and security problems of a great nation but have one-track minds geared only to the idea of establishing Marxism in the United States and throughout the world.

"Instead of merely a short courtesy call on General Douglas MacArthur to 'brief' him on what was happening, the President could have added materially to his own knowledge and served his country immeasurably if he had figuratively knelt at the feet of that towering intellect and military genius whose seasoned judgment and long experience as a dedicated defender of American security on many fronts, would have been more valuable to him in clearing his mind of indecision, and steering

More And More Presidents Are Coming To Regard Themselves As Supreme Monarchs

Writer David Lawrence is disturbed and wonders out loud in his column what President Kennedy said to Khrushchev at Vienna during a three-hour private conference between the two men, and what Khrushchev said to Kennedy.

Mr. Lawrence feels, and rightly so, that the American people are entitled to information on this subject but seems to doubt that they will get it.

Perhaps he is thinking of other executive conferences along this line such as the one at Yalta where the American people were kept in the dark concerning the secret agreements between Roosevelt and Stalin until many years later and after the damage to American prestige resulting from the agreements had already been done.

Secret Executive agreements between American and foreign heads of State are responsible for most of the trouble in the world today and for the fact that people all over the globe are at each other's throat. Also executive orders which have come to take the place of orderly legislative action are responsible for the low state of domestic affairs within the Republic.

It is only in a Monarchy where one-man rule and one-man diplomacy has any legal status and the fact that American Presidents are rapidly assuming this monarchical authority bodes ill for the future of the American Republic.

Under our form of Constitutional Government the Congress of the United States is the supreme governing body and the President is empowered to act only with the advice and consent of the Upper House of that body.

The fact that more and more in recent years the Congress has shown regrettable and criminal subservience in surrendering its authority to the Executive branch of government is responsible for the unwholesome situation where Chief Executives have come to regard themselves as supreme rulers rather than as public servants.

For Presidents are only human and, like minority units of society everywhere, if given an inch will take a mile.

Tower Supporters Were Watchful To Prevent 'Dead Mexican' Vote

During the recent close contest between John G. Tower and William Blakley for the United States Senate seat which became vacant when Lyndon Johnson was elected vice president, there was said to be some apprehension on the part of Tower's supporters that the "Dead Mexican" bit in Duval, Jim Wells, Starr and a few other counties in former political Boss Parr's kingdom and which was responsible for Johnson's election to the Senate in 1948, might be repeated.

When on the day before the election Johnson himself suddenly appeared in the State near panic is said to have resulted in Republican quarters and the watch on the offending counties was redoubled.

However, nothing happened and while Parr's lieutenants turned in the usual one-sided majorities, returns in other parts of the State were sufficient to overcome it.

From a friend and subscriber in Montana where we have spent two glorious vacations: "Don't think that your paper does not register up and down the Stillwater Valley. More and more people are looking forward to it each month."

him toward a proper course than the recommendations of a hundred self-serving politicians whose limited vision can encompass nothing more than personal ambition and political party advantage."

Editor Darden believes in keeping right on punching even after the election is over.

She may not accomplish very much, but she keeps right on trying just the same. And a great many Americans think like she does.

Membership In CORE Means A 'Conflict Of Interest'

In recent years there has been much talk about "conflict of interest" when any American is named to high office and such appointee is supposed to divest himself of connections or holdings which might be regarded as being in conflict with the duties of the position which he has assumed.

Usually this sacrifice is demanded of men who own stock in perfectly legitimate and respectable American corporations which, since we became a Socialist nation, seem to have connotations of evil. No matter what the financial sacrifice, a man named by the President to positions in the government must dispose of his stocks, bonds and securities and practically pauperize himself to become eligible for the supposed honor conferred on him.

For this reason, we have been watching carefully to see if Mr. Arthur J. Goldberg, the new Secretary of Labor, resigns as a member of the Advisory Committee of the Congress of Racial Equality otherwise known as CORE, the literature of which organization lists him in such capacity.

There are no financial considerations involved in this connection but there are things of far greater danger to our national security at stake since CORE and its Advisory Committee is heavily staffed with persons whose un-American activities over a long period of time are a matter of record.

In view of the large number of hard-core Communist Fronters identified with CORE Mr. Goldberg's association with it constitutes a "conflict of interest" in matters of our internal security and if he has not already done so he should resign at once.

Castro Ready To Trade Human Flesh For War Materials

There has perhaps been no more bitter opposition to anything in a century than to the proposed plan to submit to blackmail by Fidel Castro and send him heavy duty trucks to ransom prisoners who are not even citizens of this country.

Although the hare-brained idea was instigated by wild-eyed liberals outside the government, the President jumped in and asked private citizens to donate to the fund which these crackpots were assembling to buy the trucks, thus involving the government in the plot to pay blackmail to a bandit.

Not only was the universal opposition to this silly and ill-advised proceeding inspired by the fact that it is un-Constitutional and against the law — the Logan Act — for any individual or private group in this country to treat or negotiate with a foreign power but most of the resentment and suspicion was engendered by the fact that Eleanor Roosevelt was associated with it.

To a vast number of liberalism's lunatic fringe she is "the first lady of the world" but to most thinking Americans she is Public Nuisance No. 1. She can no more keep from meddling in things that do not concern her than she can refrain from breathing but usually her activities are laughed off as harmless and innocuous and her pronouncements regarded as the vapors of a person who is somewhat confused and unclear as to objectives, but when she assumes a role that properly belongs to a department of government, it's time to call her hand.

It is reported, but not yet confirmed, that when Mrs. Roosevelt has completed her diplomatic Cuban mission, she is going to begin a campaign to swap wheelbarrows for Freedom Riders who are now confined in Mississippi jails.

Congressman James F. Battin of Montana says that $89,000 was spent by the Public Health Service during the past year in research and issuing a detailed report on people's behavior at cocktail parties. This should be valuable information which will go a long way in solving the troublesome problems which now confront the United States on every hand. Also, we imagine that Public Health staff members stood in line in applying for this particular "research" job.

Backdoor spending of Federal money which means the unconstitutional practice of spending money borrowed from the United States Treasury, instead of Congressional appropriations, has reached 58.6 billion dollars and more billions are being added to this total annually. Only about half of this money has been paid back to the treasury according to statisticians. The Constitution provides that no money shall be spent except that appropriated by the Congress but during the Roosevelt regime this provision, along with many others, was tossed overboard. The Constitution belonged to "horse and buggy days" in Roosevelt's opinion and that conviction has prevailed in administration circles ever since.

THE TENTH AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES:

Why Were There No Guards At Utah-Nevada Defense Stations?

A lot of Americans knowing that almost a hundred billion dollars of taxpayers money has been frittered away on foreign aid are asking more and more why some of this money was not held out to provide guards for expensive defense equipment in this country.

On May 28 the nation was shocked to read that saboteurs had cut an important nerve center in America's civil defense communications system by setting off dynamite blasts that shattered three unattended microwave and cable relay communications stations in Utah and Nevada.

Why these stations were unattended is something that is not clear. It can't be lack of money since we have billions to give away to any foreign country that asks for it and the President is asking billions more to pour down foreign ratholes.

Isn't there a responsibility in some department of government to see that valuable installations which are paid for by the taxpayers are at least provided with guards to keep them from being blown up by saboteurs?

In other words, shouldn't we show as much concern for our own defense as we do for the welfare of alien people?

So far as we can learn, General Walker is still going to be permitted to salute the American flag.

Influence of Johnson and Rayburn In Texas Politics Gets A Terrific Jolt

The Sovereign State of Texas surprised and startled the nation on May 27 by electing the first Republican to the United States Senate since 1870.

In those dark Reconstruction Days the breed was known as "Black Republicans" due to Negro domination of the party. Today the Democratic Party is every bit as "black" as its Republican counterpart in racial matters so this question had no bearing on the recent election.

In fact, the contest was not waged particularly on issues since both candidates were Conservatives and both regarded as honorable, high-class and respected citizens of the State committed to policies in which the majority of the people of Texas believe. This was in refreshing contrast to many other elections when the voters have been forced to choose the lesser of two evils.

In the absence of issues, therefore, and since there are simply not enough Republicans in Texas to elect a United States Senator, the late campaign developed into a struggle between two factions of the Democratic Party, one of which voted for Democrat William Blakley, the interim senator, and the other lined up with Republican John Tower although party affiliation was not mentioned by either candidate. The latter faction being more powerful and numerous, it can only be concluded that dissatisfied Democrats are responsible for the victory of the winning candidate.

Bluntly, the result was not a Republican victory as such but rather was a direct slap in the face for the political Gold-Dust Twins, Lyndon Johnson and Sam Rayburn, whose rule over Texas has long been absolute but which has now suffered a body blow. It was a flat repudiation of these two vest-pocket czars whose double-crossing of the people of the State in the interest of party expediency has become increasingly revolting and whose high-pressuring of measures through Congress which bled the taxpayers white — although the personal fortunes of neither suffered during the process — has built up a heavy backlog of resentment which finally exploded at the ballot box.

One of the taunts hurled at the winning candidate during the campaign was the threat that if he were victorious, Texas would have one Senator and Arizona three. This was inspired by a visit of Senator Barry Goldwater to the State who urged Tower's election but did not take into consideration that if all the money spent on long distance calls from powerful Democratic officials in Washington to influential oil men and other Texans during the campaign threatening reprisal if they did not support Blakley, had been applied to the national debt, it would have reduced that obligation very materially.

Anyway, since the responsible and conservative element of Texas has had less than no representation in the United States Senate within recent memory, we could well afford to be generous and share the new Senator with the people of Arizona and still come out ahead on the deal.

We are too experienced as a political observer to make any pat predictions about the future performance of the newly-elected candidate. We have seen far too many men conduct themselves brilliantly on the stump, promise the electorate full support of sound policies and staunchly champion Constitutional Government and then, after a period in Washington, become contaminated by the noxious fumes of Socialism in that stifling citadel of Marxism on the banks of the Potomac.

We can only hope that this does not happen in the case of Mr. Tower but many strong men have gone down under Washington pressure. If he gives an inch and starts "middle-roading" the people of Texas on Federal Aid to education, civil rights, foreign aid or any other issue in which they are concerned, then his recent victory will not only have been a joke on Johnson and Rayburn, but on all the citizens of Texas who voted for him.

Why Should State Department Act As A Theatrical Booking Agency?

Congressman B a r r a t t O'Hara from Illinois recently arose on the floor of Congress and roundly criticized the State Department for paying actress Helen Hayes $2,500 per week to perform in a series of plays being given under the auspices of that agency. Miss Hayes is currently in Rome and later the State Department plans to send her to Latin American countries, according to Mr. O'Hara.

The Illinois Congressman hinted that if Miss Hayes wanted to perform in the interest of her country, she should join the Youth Peace Corps and work for nothing.

We are in agreement with Congressman O'Hara's criticism but we think he is criticising the wrong thing.

It is not what the State Department is paying Miss Hayes that is important for that is probably her price and she has a right to demand it.

What the good Congressman should be objecting to is the fact that the State Department sends Miss Hayes or any other performer abroad at the American taxpayers' expense at any price.

After all, the proper function of the State Department is to handle the diplomatic relations of the government and nowhere in our governing processes is there any authority for this agency to act as a theatrical booking agency.

The fact that it is doing so is just another evidence of how cockeyed our national leaders have become in the administration of a government whose principal mission is to preserve freedom and not to engage in show business or provide entertainment for the people either at home or abroad.

Communist Party Officials Openly Defy Supreme Court Decision

For some reason which is not clear, in the light of their past performances, the Supreme Court finally got around to handing down a verdict which makes it mandatory that the American Communist Party make public its membership list.

This matter has been hanging fire in the courts for almost eleven years.

Following the announcement of the ruling, Gus Hall the Communist Party's General Secretary announced flatly and without equivocation that the court order would not be complied with and said the party's officials would not make public their membership under any circumstances.

As he made his statement, he was flanked by a battered old female Communist, Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, veteran of many strikes, sit-ins and general acts of disorder and by Negro Benjamin J. Davis, national Communist Party secretary.

In view of the party officials' open defiance of the court ruling, there was much speculation as to what steps would be taken to force compliance.

It will be remembered, of course, that when the people of Little Rock "defied" a court order by simply insisting on continuing to run their schools according to their own ideas, they felt the sharp prick of bayonets in their backs. And when the people of Alabama resented the intrusion into their State of Communist-inspired agitators, the attorney general immediately asked for the enactment of special Federal laws to punish them.

Neither the people of Little Rock nor those of Alabama involved in the two incidents are Communists but law-abiding, peaceable tax-paying citizens and we assume that they were not singled out for special treatment and that the Communist Party officials will be given the same measure of punishment.

From a business executive in San Diego, California: "Has any one ever told you young lady that you are the best political writer in the United States?" No, we've had a few small bouquets tossed in our direction but not quite such extravagant praise as that from the San Diego gentleman. However, we're not sure that we're any more flattered by his comment on our writing than by the fact of being called "young" lady. That's really stretching it.

A bill was recently introduced in the Texas legislature making the theft of a dog a serious offense subject to a heavy fine and a prison term. We're not going to get excited about it, however, or run a temperature. What we are looking forward to with keenest anticipation is that day when a bill is introduced, and passed, making the theft of taxpayers' money a crime punishable by a penitentiary offense for the legislative robbers who instigate such crimes.

President John F. Kennedy has come up with a bold and imaginative cure for juvenile delinquency and guess what it is? He wants Federal Aid for social workers and others dealing with juvenile crime.

Adult Corruption At Top Level Is Followed By Juvenile Delinquency

Elsewhere in this edition, we have given a hint of the strong pressure that was put on rich and influential Texans by big-shot Washington politicians during the recent United States senatorial campaign which was of such threatening dimensions as to almost constitute blackmail.

In fact, since January 20, 1961, when the administration of the American government was assumed by the Kennedy family, it has become routine for those in positions of authority to employ threats of reprisal in bringing about the objectives of the New Frontier, whether it be in the stacking of a Congressional committee, the election of a United States senator or the adoption of new Marxist policies by the Congress.

The machinery of the Federal government, in the new conception, is not to be operated in the interest of all the people but rather as a weapon for rewarding the friends and punishing the enemies of those in power.

This is an extremely dangerous theory of government and one which varies in no whit from that of Soviet Russia and of Hitler's Germany.

The very make-up of our Constitutional Republic presupposes that a citizen's vote is inviolate whether he casts it for men or for measures, and any attempt by those in high authority to threaten or intimidate a man in the exercise of it is a criminal act as well as morally reprehensible and should be so treated.

In regard to the senatorial campaign in Texas recently this excerpt from an editorial in HUMAN EVENTS is illuminative of the high-pressure tactics that were exerted from Washington:

In the Tower-Blakley campaign just ended, the Johnson-Rayburn dictum to the Big Money was phrased about as follows — after all the double-talk has been screened out: "You want, do you not, to keep all the military bases and all those defense contracts that Texas is loaded up with? Some of you want big urban renewal appropriations from Washington to rebuild the run-down value of your property in downtown blighted areas. Well, then, remember that next to the President, Mr. Sam and Mr. Lyndon are the Big Boys in Washington. They don't like being crossed. Better do what Mr. Sam and Lyndon tell you."

It was our impression — and stop us if we're wrong — that the money which builds our military bases was provided by the taxpayers of the nation as a whole and that Mr. Lyndon and Mr. Sam furnished only such part of it as would be the just proportion of the tax on two men who have grown rich in public office. We did not know that these bases which have been erected at enormous expense could be snatched away from a city on the order of a couple of politicians who want to vent their spleen on the people of the State wherein such bases are located.

Also it is gratifying to us to have confirmed something we already knew but of which the general public seems unaware — that "urban renewal" is not a humanitarian plan for taking poor people out of slums but actually a clever scheme to "rebuild the value of rundown property" of wealthy owners.

When such corruption runs rampant at the top-levels of government, it is not to be wondered at when juvenile delinquency increases in frightening proportions.

Two Influential Church Groups Ask Withdrawal From National Council

After completing a ten-months study of the subject, the vestry of St. Mark's Episcopal Church, the largest Episcopal church in the Louisiana Diocese, has passed a resolution asking for the withdrawal of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States from the National Council of Churches.

Claiming that the NCC has been an aid to the Communist conspiracy even though it is not Communist in nature, the report concludes that the national church group is a "harmful and dangerous institution" which undertakes to speak for 39,000,000 American Protestants. The report points out that many NCC officials have been involved in Communist Front activities which is not exactly news as many of us have been pointing this out for years.

The Texas Synod of the Missouri Synod of the Lutheran Church has also called upon its governing Synod to break all ties with the National Council of Churches on the ground, among others, of un-Biblical and non-Lutheran teachings at some Lutheran institutions which have resulted from association with the National Council.

As a stupendous show rivaling the "King of Kings" and other Hollywood spectaculars, the glittering display in the ancient Palace of Versailles honoring the Kennedys, must have been quite impressive. Fifty million Frenchmen now know that we have a handsome young President and their style-conscious ladies undoubtedly gasped in envy and admiration at the fabulous clothes and the exotic hair-do of America's first lady although it is reported that her hair ornament of flashing diamonds which strangely resembled the diadem usually affected by British Royalty on similar occasions, rather startled some staid citizens of the French Republic who have been fed a lot of tripe in recent years to the effect that the United States is a "Democracy."

Other similar action in widely separated areas of the country indicate that it may not be too long before the walls of this heretofore impregnable left-wing political organization may begin to crumble.

Says One Difference Between Us And The Soviets Is They Know What They're Doing

Being a firm believer in sarcasm and ridicule as effective weapons to combat the incredible things that are done in Washington in the name of administering the government of the United States, we loved the following dissertation on the subject by Dr. Sam P. Cope-land of Silsbee, Texas, which recently appeared in the Beaumont Enterprise:

There is a struggle going on in the world today between two nations, or two groups of nations. One group is led by the United States of America and is known as the "free world." The other group is known as "Communitic" and is led mainly by the Soviet Union.

Soviet Russia, the principal Communist nation, is a large country with a very powerful central government. The leaders of that country do not describe their government as "Communitic," but prefer to say that their people live under "socialism."

In the United States of America we find a large country with a very powerful central government. At one time the term "capitalist" was respectable over here, but that word has fallen into disrepute and nowadays it is not uncommon to hear that we are "becoming more socialistic."

If there is any difference between the philosophies of the "free world" and the "Communist" nations, it is definitely not so clearly defined as the difference between "capitalism" and "socialism." Both sides appear to be against capitalism, and in fact it is difficult to tell which side is more socialistic.

Perhaps one could say that the socialist Russian government appears to know what it is doing, whereas the socialist American government does not appear to know what it is doing. That is to say, in Russia the economic system is owned and operated by those who govern, and everything which that country may be seen to do can be ascribed to the will and purpose of the small group of men who direct its affairs.

In our country, on the other hand, those who really govern us are forced to be more discreet in order not to disturb the illusion common among Americans that they are governed by elected officials.

We should not feel too sorry for those who govern us, however. They are making great strides toward their goal in spite of the handicap originally placed on them by the Constitution of the United States of America.

It has been necessary to delay the advancement of socialism in this country until that archaic document could be put aside, and we are now in the last stages of that process. Before the next election it will be possible to replace our Constitution with something more modern, and it will then be possible for us to advance toward socialism at a rate which will certainly equal or excel that of our Russian friends.

Everyone in this country can help our government overcome the Constitution, and thereby help our nation outstrip Russia in the race for socialist supremacy. Each one of us should decide what form of socialism we most desire, and then write our representatives in Washington requesting the same.

Many forms of socialism are available, and it should not be hard for anyone to find an appropriate cause to support. If we are not farmers or veterans or members of a minority group, we may be small businessmen, or large businessmen, or members of a labor group. If we are not any of these, we may be able to qualify as aged, and if we are not aged we can certainly well say that we are getting older all the time.

If none of these will do, we are probably in school and we can get federal aid to education, and if we fail even in that we are probably totally and permanently disabled, and we can get some help along that line.

I would like to urge everyone to get busy on this right away, because our government needs every one of us to help it help us.

With its immense taxing power, the federal government is now the source of all wealth in our nation today, and if we as citizens do not help Uncle Sam decide where to spend the wealth he is creating, he is apt to think we don't want the money, and then he might do something foolish with it.

He Believes That U.S. Communists Should Be Exposed

The Hon. Edgar Eisenhower, prominent attorney of Tacoma, Washington, recently wrote a letter to a new group of Americans which has been formed to fight Communism in which he said:

I believe wholeheartedly in the declaration which you have made relative to the purposes and the procedure of the communists.

I think every loyal, patriotic American should make a public declaration of where he stands in relation to the communists and should do everything within his or her power to expose the people in this country who are engaged in furthering the purposes of the Kremlin.

I believe many of the programs

THIS IS A REPUBLIC— NOT A DEMOCRACY— LET'S KEEP IT THAT WAY

initiated and promoted by both the Federal Government and the States, are leading this country down the path outlined by Lenin, as a part of his creed.

I sincerely hope that your program will receive immediate response and in great volume, and that it will be effective in helping to alert the people to the problem.

It is unfortunate that this member of the Eisenhower family was not a confidential adviser to his brother during the time when Joe McCarthy was trying to expose Communists in this country and in the government and the Army.

Treachery Will Figure Heavily In Federal Aid To School Legislation

Although the majority of American citizens are unalterably opposed to the Socialization of the nation's schools through the passage of a bill authorizing Federal Aid to education, responsible newspapermen in Washington predict the measure will pass this session after having been staved off for years by popular opposition.

The passage of such legislation of course will mean the removal of the public schools from the jurisdiction of the States and local school boards and place their control in the hands of Federal bureaucrats. Also it will constitute the greatest victory yet achieved by Khrushchev in his Cold War against the United States since the breaking up of fifty separate educational units and uniting them in one head obviously removes a formidable roadblock against the Communists' march toward world domination.

For years there was loud and vociferous denial that Federal Aid meant Federal control on the part of proponents of this legislation but, now that passage is almost assured, they don't bother to insult the public intelligence any longer by such claims. They admit that it will mean total and absolute control of public schools by Washington, and, in effect, add: "So what are you going to do about it?"

The movement for Federal Aid to schools has long been spearheaded by the National Education Association which is heavily dominated by hard-core Marxists and whose multi-million dollar lobby in Washington constitutes a transmission belt for spreading propaganda which has proved irresistible to many weakminded members of Congress who are incapable of thinking for themselves.

But the major blame if this legislation passes, according to many Washington observers, will lie with the treachery of Southern members of Congress whose renunciation of principle and repudiation of the wishes of their constituency since the advent of the New Frontier in Washington provides an example of subservient surrender by elected officials to bureaucratic power which is a disgrace to the Republic.

Southern leaders in both Houses who have been largely responsible for holding back this Communist-inspired legislation are now reported ready to vote for it, and the stacking of the Rules Committee of the House at the opening of the current session is now recognized as having been maneuvered largely in the interest of placing schools under Federal control.

This Is A Republic And Here's One Who's Doing His Best To Try To Keep It That Way

Last month we reproduced an article from a New York paper telling of the attempts being made to suppress the use of postage meter plates reading: "This is a Republic—not a Democracy—let's keep it that way."

The article also told how Postal authorities had decided that the expression was controversial and should be discontinued.

Accordingly, the company, Pitney-Bowes, which has made some 300,000 of these meters and leased them to various companies began calling them in on the ground that they were "controversial."

They were successful in recalling them until they bumped into a full-fledged, two-fisted and un intimidated American named A. G. Heinsohn, Jr. of Sevierville, Tennessee, who uses the postage meter plate on all literature issued by the Cherokee Textile Mills of which he is President, and there they struck a snag.

After numerous letters, telephone calls and personal visits from representatives of the Pitney-Bowes Company, Mr. Heinsohn made known his final decision in the matter in a communication to officials of that company in which he said:

We believe the time has come

Judged by the fiscal standards of Washington which seems to set the pace, the State of Texas is making progress. On May 9, the deficit was $69,641,536 while fifteen days later it was $75,342,854. At that rate it should not be long before we spend ourselves into prosperity.

to call a halt to this senseless ring-around-the-roxy.

Your phone calls and your letters cause us to be more determined than ever to continue using the postage meter plate you made for us, reading:

"This is a republic,
not a democracy—
Let's keep it that way."

In our humble opinion a statement of historic fact does not become "politically controversial" because the New York Times, or the Daily Worker, or Pravda so decrees.

Your pompous statement, "This is in all cases determined by the attitude of the public—not ourselves" is contradictory, since you presume to determine what the public thinks.

Or, are we wrong? Does some hidden New York Times character tell the Post Office to tell you to tell us what he thinks the public thinks? If you do not act as censor yourself, then turn over the rock and let's see who is hiding under it.

In any event, we request that you write us no more letters on the subject, because we will use the plate until you, or the Post Office, or the New York Times, or Khrushchev or someone stops us by court order.

Period.

American taxpayers can kiss $500,000,000 more of their money goodbye. The President recently signed a bill giving this amount to Latin American countries who are busily engaged at the moment in playing footsie with Fidel Castro.

Senate Committee Report Reveals Sabotage At Defense Missile Plants

Opposition to Political Church Organization Continues To Mount

Opposition to the National Council of Churches, purportedly a religious group but actually seeking to influence American political, economic, social and other policies having nothing whatever to do with spiritual considerations, is gradually growing throughout the country.

One of the latest moves against NCC was made by Saint John the Divine Church in Houston, largest Episcopal group in that city, which went on record recently as objecting to the National Council's public stands on controversial political issues.

"Many of our communicants believe that the making of such political pronouncements and the publicity frequently given to them tends to create the public impression that Protestants everywhere support the positions taken and that there are no Christian alternatives to such positions," the church's rector Rev. Thomas W. Sumners said.

The same position is being taken by many Protestant ministers throughout the country but whether this opposition stems from sincere conviction on the part of the ministers or is dictated by the mounting resentment of their members who pay their salaries is not known.

At any rate, it will be a fortunate day for the forces of Christianity when, and if, the National Council is compelled by an indignant public to either re-organize as a religious body or go out of existence.

Scientists report that within a few years they may be able to bring about a system of weather control which will make for a more or less unified climate in the world. And why not? The objective for years has been to level off and make conformists of human beings so why not the weather? Personally, we had thought that this was one job which should be left to the Creator but when World Planners square off and go into action, nothing is exempt from being "regulated."

Alvin York was a World War I hero whose exploits in capturing the enemy single-handed made him renowned throughout the world. However, he fell upon bad times, became ill and had other misfortunes including financial troubles. The Internal Revenue Department charged that he owed them several thousand dollars in back taxes and demanded its pound of flesh. Friends, neighbors and admirers contributed to a fund for York and the back taxes were paid off. Adam Clayton Powell of New York was also claimed by the Department of Internal Revenue to owe several thousand dollars in back taxes covering many years. His case was dismissed. York is White; Powell is a Negro.

The Subcommittee on Investigations of the Committee on Government Operations of the United States Senate of which Honorable John L. McClellan of Arkansas is chairman has issued a 354-page report on the stoppage of work at missile bases in this country by labor union bosses.

The committee does not exactly call it sabotage but that is what it is and if any lay American reads this report—which they probably won't—they will have less heart in fighting Khrushchev when they have finished it. They will figure that it's no use as long as labor bosses are allowed to indulge in practices which jeopardize a program supposedly designed to enable this nation and the free world to survive.

Exorbitant charges for work running up to as much as $14 per hour by employes at these missile plants, strikes, jamming the machinery to slow down production and other skulduggery to hinder the program is told in detail in the report which covers testimony of fourteen witnesses.

Legislation to take care of the situation, however, is not in prospect because too many members of both Houses of Congress are in bondage to labor unions who have paid their campaign expenses.

The report will probably gather dust like so many others and nothing will be done. Within recent years enough paper has been used by various committees in Washington investigating all forms of corruption, including treason, to reach around the world but nothing happens.

The Federal government has threatened action which should go a long way toward settling the troublesome questions which beset this nation and the world. It has seized a quantity of cheese and announces that Wisconsin cheese manufacturers and processors may be prosecuted for punching holes in their Swiss cheese by artificial means. This is deceiving the public, the FDA charged. Oh boy, if this were the only deception being practiced against the American public wouldn't we be in hog heaven?

Teachers in 77 integrated public schools in Chicago announced recently that they feared for their lives and never knew when they left home in the morning whether they would get back alive at night. But it is of course "Alabama" which is giving this country a bad name with other nations of the world.

The current farm bill before Congress sponsored by the hack politician, Orville Freeman, defeated Governor of Minnesota and Kennedy's Secretary of Agriculture has been bitterly denounced by every responsible farm group in the country. The bill, if passed, would set Freeman up as an absolute czar of the nation's farming industry and reduce the farmers to the status of serfs. So the bill will probably pass.

New Jersey Gets A Tragic Dose Of 'Freedom Riding' On A Small Scale

What might be described as a miniature "freedom ride" by two Negro men one night recently in Union County New Jersey ended up in one of the most ghastly crimes in the history of that State.

These two black fiends had recently come up from the South and were enjoying a new form of "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" in New Jersey, one of the most "integrated" States in the Union and where a White man is held in almost as much esteem as a Negro.

These two didn't try to break down racial barriers because there are none left in New Jersey to break down, but decided, instead, to start their criminal activities on a top-level basis.

Driving along a dark road outside the city of Union, they saw two lone white women whose car had broken down. So these two black beasts got in the car, ripped the women's clothes off, criminally assaulted them and then killed them by driving the victims' car over their bodies.

The following detailed confession of one of the fiends appeared, not in a Southern paper, but in the New York Journal American on Sunday, May 28, and was written by Dom Frasca, staff-writer on that publication:

Here is the confession of Loretta Parks to the murders of Mrs. Eleanor Ewell, 49, and Mrs. Eleanor Tyson, 50, prominent New Jersey matrons. In it he tells in detail how he and his companion, Joseph Maxey, killed their helpless victims. The confession was made to Prosecutor H. Douglas Stine of Union County, N. J.

"We had the urge — the urge to kill. We killed them all right.

"We had six or seven drinks of rye and soda in a tavern in Fanwood, near Plainfield.

"We met a girl in the tavern we knew. But Maxey didn't like her, so we drove her home and then looked around Plainfield for awhile.

"As we were cruising around we saw this Cadillac stalled on North Ave. Two women were in it. A taxicab driver was behind the wheel trying to start the engine.

"Maxey told me, 'Let's take a look.' We stopped and Maxey went to work on the engine.

"In a few seconds, the motor turned over.

"I jumped into the Caddy, behind the wheel, and hollered to Maxey, 'Come on.' And I drove away, in the Caddy.

"He got into his car and took off right behind us.

"The woman (Mrs. Ewell) was sitting in the front seat beside me, and the other one (Mrs. Tyson) was in the back seat.

"Mrs. Tyson kept saying—'What

At first racial mongrelizers were howling against "discrimination" in education; then it was "discrimination" in industry, then in housing. Now a group of "minority race" students at Syracuse University are screaming out against "discrimination" in dating. What next, pray God?

in the world do you think you're doing?"

"Mrs. Ewell kept asking—'Goodness, what is this all about?'

"I drove down a dead-end street (Milton Pl. at Berkeley Terrace), and pulled the car into a lot there. Maxey was right behind me in his car.

"He came running up to me and said, 'Gimmie one of them.'

"Before I could tell him anything, he opened the front door on the right side and told Mrs. Ewell—'C'mon, get out.'

"She was shaking all over. 'I got into the back seat with Mrs. Tyson. The other woman was struggling so Maxey pulled her from the car.

"Mrs. Ewell was screaming — 'Please leave me alone.'

"Then Mrs. Tyson started to scream. 'You beasts... you beasts,' she was saying.

"I saw Maxey pushing Mrs. Ewell away from the Caddy.

"Then Mrs. Tyson opened the door and tried to get out, I pulled her back, and started to choke her with a necklace she was wearing.

"Oh, God... Oh God," she was saying, 'Let me live... let me live.'

"I loosened my hold on the necklace and I tore off her clothes and then—well, she was like in a swoon when I did it.

"Maxey came back to the car and got behind the steering wheel.

"We have to kill them,' he said... 'Make sure you kill her.'

"He started the car and went back and forth five or six times over an area of about 15 feet.

"I knew he was running over Mrs. Ewell.

"I took off my belt and looped it around Mrs. Tyson's neck, and pulled it as tight as I could. She stopped breathing.

"I told Maxey to get into his car and wait for me. I picked up Mrs. Ewell's purse and her wallet and keys. There was $26 in her wallet.

"Then I remembered I left my belt around Mrs. Tyson's neck. I went back into the car and got it.

"Maxey had the engine of his car started, and was hollering to me to hurry up.

"I ran to his car, got in, and he drove me home.

"Don't say a word about this to anyone,' Maxey said.

"I know you're going to burn me, so it doesn't make any difference now.

"You treat us good here. Down South they'd string us up after I told them what I just told you."

(Editor's note: We believe the people of other States might profit by re-reading the last paragraph of this human fiend's confession.)

We could not help noticing how gently the newsmen — and woman — on Meet the Press dealt with Ed Murrow when he appeared on that program on June 4. It was in such contrast to their harsh questioning of good Americans on the rare occasions when one of the latter is invited to appear on their program. In spite of the fact that they're supposed to be unbiased and tough, they just oozed kindness toward Murrow.

Hard-Hitting Columnist Gives Views On The John Birch Society

The following editorial is by Westbrook Pegler, one of the most outspoken, fearless and dynamic writers of contemporary history, and is reproduced through special permission from Mr. Pegler and from King Features Syndicate:

A political vapor called the John Birch Society is being had up for ruin by ridicule at the hands of those who bait red-baiters. The opposition arises as usual in New York and Washington. The chief criticism lies against Robert Welch, of Boston, who impugned the patriotism of General Eisenhower and Chief Justice Earl Warren but who hedged when accused. The political gravity of such a comment on these two is exaggerated by the clamor against Welch and the society. The very Constitution of the United States, far from precluding as unthinkable, the proposition that a President, ex-President or Chief Justice could be guilty of impeachable misconduct, did contemplate that possibility in Article II, Section 4, as follows:

"The President, Vice President and all civil officers shall be removed on impeachment and conviction of treason, bribery or other high crimes and misdemeanors."

The founding fathers knew men.

The common political literature of the last campaign included one routine book which contained an emphatic implication, if not, indeed, in a lawyer's judgment, a flat charge, that both Ike and Warren made a deal that planted Warren on the bench as Chief. The truth of the transaction by which Warren got the job with the highest pay of his life, for the rest of his life, plus a legal but undeserved pension of $16,000 a year from the State of California as an ex-Governor, is not adjudicated here. It might be good for our morals and our understanding to clarify for history the facts of that business and remind every individual in the nation that Presidents and all members of the court are all accountable under law for aberrations away from the code laid down to control the administration of their jobs.

It would be fair to examine Warren's attitude toward money in his personal affairs all the way from his first political position. He frequently disclosed shrewd, practical and, you may say, admirable sense. He couldn't afford to accept the job

All the hoopla and pomp and ceremony in Paris where the Presidents of two countries palavered for three days did not accomplish anything from the standpoint of diplomacy and understanding that had not already been accomplished and which could have been confirmed by the expenditure of a few cents in postage stamps. De Gaulle merely reiterated his position that he would cooperate with the United States when it was in the interest of France to do so; otherwise not. Which is exactly as it should be. He's the President of France and his first loyalty belongs to his native land.

of Vice President at the going pay the first time the nomination was available to him because he had a large family of daughters who were just entering the most expensive age of daughters. We had no honest way to sweeten the pot and Warren backed off until four years later when he may have been just as glad he lost as sorry he didn't win. The pay was still insufficient.

Eisenhower was one of the worst Presidents we ever had. It was clear to anyone who ever shot golf or pined for the leisure to play while Ike was idling his days away, that he was neglecting the job he was paid to do. The skulduggery in the 1952 convention in Chicago was so raw that, neophyte though he was, Ike could not plead stupidity as an excuse for this deal.

The John Birch Society's interest runs to communism in the United States. Ike's most emphatic action was favorable to this evil, for all he really did was exclude Joe and Jeannie McCarthy from two of his boresome pours for members of Congress at the White House. The snub was uncouth, personal and an affront to the many Americans who had a better opinion of McCarthy than of Ike.

The furor over the John Birch Society arose from the showing across the nation of an anti-Communist film based on the Red riot in the San Francisco City Hall which disrupted a session of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. Congress itself was sitting in that City Hall at the time in the person of that committee and the communist commotion was just as offensive to Congress as though it had occurred on Capitol Hill. Yet the rioters, not the committee nor Congress, have received the toleration and mitigation. And the committee has been vilified with familiar formulated Red propaganda.

Birch was a hero of the O.S.S. who died bravely at Chinese hands in China ten days after V-Day. General Claire Chennault acclaimed him in his biography, "Way of a Fighter," and yet, after all these years, Birch's name is fouled with scurrilities by individuals who claimed that he had died not as a brave patriot but as a brash four-flusher.

The heat and vigor of the campaign tempt me to study the society's program. Maybe that's for me.

Dean Eugene Rostow of Yale Law School is quoted by a columnist as having said recently: "Young men must be given an opportunity to express themselves. Going out to sell deodorants just doesn't meet their needs. The Peace Corps does." The deodorants will come later when the scandals which this venture into international idiocy must be fumigated and cleaned up to appear as having been a successful humanitarian operation, instead of a wild project launched to precipitate One World Government.

Secretary of State Gives Unique Definition Of The United Nations

The United Nations has been called many things by many people, most of them uncomplimentary, but it has perhaps remained for Mr. Dean Rusk, present Secretary of State to give the most puzzling and unique definition of that One-World organization which has yet been made.

When he was Deputy Under Secretary of State in 1949 Mr. Rusk said according to the Subcommittee on the United Nations Charter of the United States Senate, document No. 87, page 834, Second session 83rd Congress:

"The (United Nations) Charter is our basic over-all agreement with the Soviet Union."

Now what on earth could he have meant by that?

The United Nations was brought into being and ratified by the Senate of the United States on the assumption that it was an "agreement" of all participating nations in a vast world-wide program of peace.

But Mr. Rusk sees it as an "agreement" between the United States and Russia and if that is true what did these two nations "agree" to?

Since he is now the chief designer (in theory at least) of American foreign policy, he should re-define his estimate of the United Nations or at least explain what he meant by saying it was an "agreement" between the United States and Russia.

With some 90 nations as members of this outfit, to say that two of them had an "agreement" sounds extremely sinister to us.

CALIFORNIA GETS DOSE OF ITS OWN MEDICINE

Newspapers of the nation carried on their front pages June 10 a report of an incident in Los Angeles which, in view of California's official attitude on racial mixing, might be called poetic justice.

The California Senate at Sacramento had just passed a resolution demanding that Negroes be allowed to live in restricted residential districts and that all attempts of White people to have exclusive residential sections where they could live to themselves, be declared illegal.

Apparently hopped up by this new act of partiality to their race by American lawmakers, 20 young colored thugs decided to celebrate.

Accordingly they armed themselves with clubs, hammers and pitchforks and crashed a party being given in exclusive Beverly Hills by members of a White high school sorority. The party broke up hastily as the young White boys and girls ran for their lives.

Three of the guests were beaten and required hospital treatment and several others suffered minor injuries.

Four patrol cars arrived and police arrested the colored hoodlums. When asked by an arresting officer why they had behaved as they did, one of the Negroes replied, according to the press, "We decided to go there to get some girls."

The Office Of President Of The United States Is A Full Time Job

We believe that the vast majority of thinking Americans keenly regret that President John F. Kennedy fell into the trap that ensnared several Presidents before him and accepted an invitation to become Nikita Khrushchev's victim in the cat and mouse game as played by the Soviet dictator recently in Vienna.

During the campaign Mr. Kennedy solemnly promised that he would not make this mistake and expressed the strong conviction that before any "summit meeting" was held, this country should build up its economic and military strength. The voters took him at his word.

In the months since he has been in office the strength of the United States has not been increased militarily, economically, diplomatically or otherwise. On the contrary, the fiascos in Laos, Cuba and other trouble spots where we talked big and acted little left the President nothing but weakness from which to deal with Christian civilization's arch enemy from the Russian Steppes.

But still he went to Vienna any way just as Eisenhower invited Khrushchev to this country in the face of nationwide and almost universal opposition. This adds to the widespread belief that a President of the United States is no longer his own master and that his actions, like those of all other leaders of the so-called free nations, are directed by a powerful super-governing world body—of whose composition we do not yet know — and which moves the heads of government about like pawns on a vast chess board.

The "summit conferences" with Khrushchev are always accompanied by rigged publicity for consumption in this country which gives comforting assurance to the American people that progress was made, good was accomplished and advancement toward peace was realized, but later events have always borne out the fact that the American "conferee" at the "summit" was lucky to have gotten home with his shirt and his pants.

And any way, regardless of "summit conferences" with Khrushchev or anybody else where in the Constitution is an American President authorized to be constantly circling the globe? It used to be that men were urged to "join the Navy and see the world" but now the same result is achieved by being elected President. In the opinion of plain vanilla Americans like us, the initial responsibility of an American Chief Executive is to stay on the job and first prove his wisdom, judgment and ability to conduct the affairs of his own country with sanity, solvency and common sense before he lights out for Europe and other far-off places to expound his views to the heads of other nations. This Mr. Kennedy has not yet done.

Of course part of his itch to travel derives from the new concept of his job and the inherited belief that he is a "World Leader" on whom the destiny of mankind depends although he has not yet "led" anything except a deadly assault against the empty United States Treasury. The administration of our own government is regarded, somehow, as just a sideline to be executed in spare time between global demands. Three Presidents before him had this illusion of "world leadership" too but it turned out that they were just good stamp collectors, piano players and golfers. The world is far worse off now than it was when they undertook to "lead" it.

There is no more exalted or inspiring position in the universe than that of the office of President of the United States and it's a full-time job.

We hope that Mr. Kennedy comes to realize this and that it is borne in upon him that while he has no commission from anybody to perform as a "World Leader," he has been given a lofty assignment by the American people which is a greater honor than that enjoyed by any reigning sovereign on the face of the earth.

If he would only meet this sacred assignment by making his goal the strengthening of our national defense; revival of the Monroe Doctrine as an unswerving national policy; reducing the national debt and practicing economy with the taxpayers' money; repudiating Socialism and the Welfare State in favor of a revitalized free enterprise system; restoring the Rights of States and of property and returning to the citizen the lost freedom bequeathed him as his eternal legacy in a Constitutional Republic, his name would be listed among the immortals of American history.

In brief, if he would only discharge his moral and Constitutional obligations to the frightened, despondent and heartsick people of the United States and put our own house in order, he would not have time nor the need to traipse around over the world attending "summit meetings."

To those rich men who have donated their money to Red universities, Red church groups and others dedicated to the destruction of the American form of government: We hope you're satisfied now that we're coming to the end of Constitutional Government and embracing World Socialism of the Soviet type. You have contributed just as substantially to this end as hard-core Communists, and have proved a traitor to a system which enabled you to amass a fortune. You must be inordinately proud of yourselves.

On February 13, 1959, Negro Ralph Bunche said in Birmingham, Alabama, that "White supremacy is rapidly declining," and warned that the colored races are catching up. He added: "The world of 1959 is not by any means a White man's world. Today it is overwhelmingly a non-White world and one in which the power of the White man is rapidly declining. New voices of yellow, brown and black men command attention in the councils of the world." We got a similar warning too about Communism but we failed to heed it.

Karl Marx Scores Another Victory in U.S. Congress

A legislative measure taken almost in its entirety from the recommendations of Karl Marx a century ago has passed both Houses of Congress and will be signed by the President.

This bill provides that the Federal government will build more private homes for individuals, build college dormitories, build houses for the elderly, order the clearance of slums "to rebuild the nation's cities" and engage in other private real estate transactions after first confiscating the money for the program from the taxpayers without their consent.

It is the most deadly blow against free enterprise yet struck by the Socialist Planners in the White House and in Congress who puzzle what passes for their brains around the clock to find new methods of liquidating a free economy and substituting in its place a total and complete dictatorship in Washington.

There was no immediate estimate of what this vast Socialist program will cost but since the Federal treasury lacks nearly three hundred billion dollars of having any balance such an estimate would have been strictly academic.

No longer is there any inclination on the part of the sponsors of such legislation to deny that they are following a strictly Marxist program and their attitude in the matter has boiled down to this query:

"What do the taxpaying suckers think they can do about it?"

Every decent American should get a copy of the Congressional Record showing the vote of each member of both Houses on this bill and either take a solemn oath to vote against them when they come up for re-election or just let them get by with it thus tacitly inviting them to continue and enlarge their thieving spree against the nation's taxpayers.

He Was Smart Enough To Wait Until His Own Job Was Safe

Edward R. Murrow, appointed by President Kennedy to head the United States Information Agency, recently made a special appeal to Congress for $172,711 for the purpose, as he explained it, of "keeping screwballs out of USIA."

He would have psychiatrists examine all applicants for jobs in the agency before such applicants were accepted but no provision apparently is to be made for preventing "screwball" psychiatrists from doing the examining.

The $172,711 is in addition to the $118.6 million already requested for conducting the agency's affairs for the next fiscal year.

Mr. Murrow's request for the wherewithal to keep "screwballs" out of the agency was made after his own nomination had been confirmed by the Senate.

In view of the threat to the safety and security and perhaps the survival of the Republic by the stepped-up program of the Soviets to conquer the world, we believe that a halt, or at least a truce, should be called in Washington's War of Hate against the South while our leaders take on such problems as Laos, Vietnam and Cuba.
