Some of these students, taking second semester dance techniques, seem to be having some problems trying to be as coordinated and graceful as their instructor, Bill Hudson. Teaching them to do camel walks and plies took up most of their class time Tuesday in the Humanities Building.

Chicanos angry at police sentencing

By R. CARLOS CAVAZOS
News Editor

Concilio agreed Tuesday night to have a demonstration at noon Monday in front of the UC to protest a federal judge's sentencing of three former Houston police officers involved in the death of Joe Campos Torres last year.

U.S. District Judge Ross Sterling Tuesday sentenced the three defendants to one year in prison. The three former officers were convicted in February by a federal court jury of violating Torres' civil rights. Torres' body was found in a Houston bayou early May 8, three days after he had been arrested during a disturbance at a tavern. The cause of death was drowning.

Carless Elliott, a rookie officer at the time, reported the event to his superiors, and testified at both the state and federal trials that Torres had been beaten, slapped and threatened with being pushed into the bayou. Elliott was never charged.

The defendants, Terry W. Denson, 27; Stephen Orlando, 22; and Joseph Janish, 22; were ordered to serve one year in a federal prison on a misdemeanor conviction. Sterling also handed down a 10-year suspended sentence, with five of those years probated, for a felony civil rights conviction that carried a maximum penalty of life imprisonment.

The Associated Press said the victim's mother called the sentence another "slap in the face."

Concilio chair Rudy Velasquez asked Concilio members, who represent UH Chicano organizations including engineering, law and pre-law students, to note that the three former police officers could be out in four months on good behavior.

Pablo Rodriguez, ethnic affairs director, said he was generally disgusted with the way the decision had been going all along in the Torres case. He said Chicanos and the community had been built up to wait and they would see that justice was done. But then nothing happened, he said.

Rodriguez said he had heard one Chicano community leader say that before justice is done, there may have to be more violence, and now the community may agree with that.

"I think I expected something stiffer. I agree with Senora Torres that it was a slap in the face," Martha Donaho, who represents the Tradhaadores Sociales de Aztlan, said.

Sandra Vasco, Concilio vice chair, said the sentence meant that the Chicano in the community does not mean anything and that if Concilio could do something it should.

The only thing that has improved, according to Mexican-American Youth Organization representative Roman Perales, is that police officers have been convicted for crimes against Chicanos.

"But the penalty—they're soon to get off," Perales said.

"I was really disappointed (in the sentence), not only because Torres was a Chicano, but because he was a human being. They killed another human being," said Nora Solano, representing the Chicano engineering students.

Senate approves three during final meeting

By JO ANN ZUNIGA
Staff Writer

Three committee appointments and a resolution marked the swan song of the 1977-78 Student Senate at its final meeting Monday night.

The appointment of Yocel Alonso to the Student Service Fee Planning and Allocation Committee stirred minor dissent between senate speaker Vic Quintanilla and Sens. David Patronella and Bonnie James. The senate eventually approved Alonso for the position.

Alonso was appointed for the position by outgoing SA President Keith Wade, whose term expires next Monday.

James requested a quorum count before the vote was taken on Alonso's appointment, but Quintanilla would not do so. SA bylaws specify that a quorum must be present for any action to be taken, and that any action of the senate is valid until the speaker officially determines that a quorum is not present.

"I decided there was a quorum and continued with senate business. In Robert's Rules of Order, the speaker is not obligated to hold a quorum count," Quintanilla said. "In fact, the vote tally for the appointment proves the senate had the necessary quorum of 15 senators. Ten senators voted in favor of the appointment, four voted against Alonso, and then there was myself. There were other senators present who just didn't vote."

The senate also approved architecture junior Allan Youngblood and accounting junior Audrey Odell to the UC Policy Board.

Senators also passed a resolution to strongly urge the implementation of a Baylor study proposal for the UH Health Center. Sen. Karen Holgersen, the resolution's author, said the study "has cost the university $10,000, and it would be a waste of that much money if the study's recommendations for personnel and structural changes were not implemented."

Morning star

Looking like a star that got itself all twisted while spinning to earth, Robert Graham Sr.'s sculpture "Genesis" was retitled "Decadent" by someone who also decided to move it. It was situated on a hill by the UC, but is now in a park next to the law school.

Arab nation relies on others rather than help refugees

By PAUL GUTTERMAN

It has been said that it would really take a Kafka or an Orwell to do justice to the Arab refugee problem. After years of repetition, an intricate system of myths, half-truths and distortions has come to gain wide acceptance among people with genuine humanitarian concerns. Indeed, objectively, there is a genuine humanitarian problem involving Arab refugees. That the solution of the refugee problem has been linked to a political movement called "Palestinian nationalism" is the first and essential element of the semantic masquerade.

To gain some perspective on the problem, one need only examine some other refugee problems of this century. At the end of World War II, in the chaotic readjustment of political borders which occurred, some 12 million Germans were, physically and against their will, uprooted from Eastern Europe and resettled in West Germany. When India was partitioned in 1947, some 14 million refugees were created; eight million Hindus left Pakistan and six million Moslems left India.

There are more examples. Russia expelled Finns, Bulgaria expelled Turks and so on. Neither India nor Pakistan are rich countries, yet they, like all of the other countries mentioned above, solved their refugee problems without special aid, special international agencies, political movements or terrorist organizations.

According to British figures, there were about 561,000 Arabs living in the part of Palestine which became Israel. After the cease-fire in 1949, about 140,000 remained. Despite this, in December 1948, the UN reported that it was feeding 750,000 refugees. The fact is that the creation of the UN headline itself motivated Arabs living in Arab countries to leave their homes and declare themselves refugees. As a matter of fact, the International Red Cross openly encouraged the UN to allow Arabs to obtain relief as refugees without senselessly abandoning their homes. An additional 100,000 names were added to the relief roles in this way, for humanitarian reasons. They and their descendants are now among the political pawns of an anti-humanitarian cause.

The Arab leaders, having created the refugee problem by encouraging Arabs to leave Israel, have not seen fit to solve the problem in 30 years.

prisingly candid statement made by Zuheir Mohsen, head of the Saiga branch of the PLO, head of military operations for the PLO and a member of its Supreme Council in an interview given to James Dorsey in the Dutch daily Trouw, March 31, 1977:

"There are no differences between Jordanians, Palestinians, Syrians and Lebanese. We are all part of one nation. It is only for political reasons that we carefully underline our Palestinian identity, because it is in the interest of the Arabs to encourage a separate Palestinian identity in contrast to

commentary

If the refugee problem were solved, a vast UN bureaucracy, UNRWA, employing 11,000 people, financed by the taxpayers of the world, would cease to exist. That the Arab nations have the wealth to have solved the refugee problem in a non-political, humane way is beyond any doubt; that they have not done so is an indication that the humanitarian aspect of the problem is of little consequence to them.

In 1921-1923, eastern Palestine was eliminated and a Palestinian Arab entity, Trans-Jordan, was created. Today Jordan is still an Arab state in what was Palestine. Yet, we are told by a well-orchestrated chorus there is need of a second Palestinian Arab state. For nearly 20 years, until 1967, Judaea, Samaria and the Gaza Strip were under Arab control and no such state was created. Indeed, before the creation of a state of Israel, Arab nationalists rejected even the word "Palestine"; Palestine was an artificial entity on land which was, to them, rightfully part of southern Syria. The motivation for this newly found national fervor can be found in a sur-

Zionism. Yes, the existence of a separate Palestinian identity is there only for tactical reasons. The establishment of a Palestinian state is a new expedient to continue the fight against Zionism and for Arab unity."

The Arabs could solve the refugee problem tomorrow, as Israel did when it absorbed three quarters of a million of the 900,000 Jews who were forced out of the Arab countries. Instead they prefer to bankroll the PLO so that it may continue to murder defenseless civilians. (The PLO has yet to engage a military target.) The recent murder of Arabs who have been willing to talk of peace is an indication of the PLO's concept of democracy; the creation of a Palestinian state, armed to the teeth by the Soviet Union, would lead to a level of terror and violence which would make the PLO's senseless and grisly carnage pale by comparison; it would create and augment suffering for Jews and Arabs alike, and worsen the problem which it would pretend to solve.

Editor's note: Gutterman is a graduate student in mathematics.

Jetset executives who think only farmworkers are exposed to pesticides may be wrong. For as they sip their cocktails on their next cross-country flight, they, too, may unknowingly be exposed to hazardous chemicals.

More than 1,100 commercial airlights in the United States were dusted with DDT prior to take-off last year. The use of the chemical was ordered by the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA), apparently to curb the migration of Japanese Beetles in the country.

The Aviation Consumer Action Project is suing the USDA to stop the use of DDT in airline cabins. Among other allegations, the consumer group charges that the agency's order should have been preceded by an environmental impact statement.

A Food and Drug Administration study indicated some sprayings were followed by meager clean-up attempts consisting of wiping seat and galley surfaces with a towel. In one flight, DDT mist was still visibly suspended in the cabin as passengers began to board.

DDT, a suspected carcinogen, was one of the first pesticides taken off the market by the Environmental Protection Agency.

The consumer group indicated particular concern that the pesticide might contaminate foods or beverages in the galley of the airplanes.

This same consumer group recently petitioned the Federal Aviation Administration to ban the use of certain materials in airline cabins which produce toxic gases when burned.

The Aviation Consumer Action Project cited instances in which airline accident victims were unable to escape burning aircrafts because they were incapacitated by toxic fumes produced by flaming material used in the construction of the cabin.

Justice wans again over Torres' death

Again, the light of justice has dimmed over the death of Joe Campos Torres.

For the second time, the Houston police officers who had him in their custody have been found responsible for his death. For the second time, they virtually have been excused politely by a court of law.

Admittedly, there are times when leniency toward offenders is justified. But this is not one of those times.

The arrogance and paranoia of the more redneck faction of HPD is known across the state and across the nation. It's not difficult to picture a group of self-righteous HPD officers showing absolutely no regard to the dignity of another human being, especially when that person is intoxicated and not in complete control of his faculties.

But this case is different. This arrogance and self-righteousness resulted in the death of a human being. These officers toyed with Torres' freedom and life as if it were the prize in a game of penny-ante poker. And a person's freedom and life are worth much more than that.

People busted for possession of marijuana often get stiffer sentences than Terry Denson, Stephen Orlando and Joseph Janish got for taking a life. We believe the world has truly witnessed the darker side of justice.

We are not calling for the death penalty for Denson, Orlando and Janish. Any death, even under Hammurabi's code, is an atrocity against all humanity. But Torres' death is also an atrocity—one which no civilized, intellectual society should blithely accept. Uncivilized actions by these officers resulted in the death of a human being, and a one-year punishment for those responsible cannot relieve the pangs of conscience of a society based on justice. But then, maybe ours is a different society.

From the Associated Press

BEAUFORT ASTLE, Lebanon—Guerrilla Chief Yasser Arafat said Tuesday that his Palestine Liberation Organization would extend "all our military capacities" to help United Nations peacekeeping troops in southern Lebanon disengage the Palestinians and invading Israeli forces.

But radical guerrillas in the field, under Arafat's nominal but imperfect control, vowed to fight any United Nations attempt to impose a cease-fire in their two-week-old battle with the Israelis inside Lebanon.

AUSTIN—The League of Women Voters in Texas said Tuesday it supports gradual deregulation of domestic natural gas prices with taxes on windfall profits.

Cheerleaders ranked

The UH cheerleaders have been ranked 10th in the nation by the International Cheerleading Foundation, Inc.

This is the first time that the squad has been ranked nationally. It was judged on a report sent to the foundation by head cheerleader Ronnie Middleton.

The deadline for cheerleader registration for next year is 3 p.m. Friday. Registration forms should be turned into the dean of students' office in the Student Life Building.

The candidates will meet Friday at 3 p.m. on the third floor of the Student Life Building.

Union unloads buses after picketing ends

(AP)—Longshoremen are ready to unload 25 West German school buses from a Russian ship here now that the National Maritime Union has withdrawn its pickets, a union official said Tuesday.

International Longshoremen's Association Local 872 President

C.G. Kirby said he was just waiting for the order from the stevedoring company. The ILA traditionally respects NMU picket lines.

Maritime union port agent Kirby-Smith McDowell pulled the pickets off Tuesday morning after Department of Transportation Secretary Brook Adams agreed to meet with union representatives in Washington to discuss their complaint that U.S. tax dollars are being used to transport the buses on Russian ships.

Pickets patrolled the Goodpasture Terminal wharf following the arrival of the Skulptor Golubkina Monday night. They were protesting the use of Russian carriers to transport the 398 buses destined for a pilot transit project in Houston. The Department of Transportation is funding 80 percent of the project.

AM General Corporation, a subsidiary of American Motors Corp., is importing the buses which a company representative described as a type not available in the United States.

Another shipment of 25 buses was unloaded here last month without incident, but the maritime union is now seeking to have the remainder shipped on U.S. flag carriers.

Dance-a-thon will send kids to camp

By JANET WELLS
Staff Writer

The fourth annual Camp Cougar Dance-a-thon, a 25-hour dance marathon, will get underway at noon April 13 in the UC Arbor and will continue until 1 p.m. the next day.

The dance-a-thon, sponsored by Chi Omega sorority, KUHF, and the UH residence halls, is open to any organization or group of individuals "who want to dance a while and help us make money at the same time," said Bobby Brownstein, residence halls manager.

The teams will dance to music provided by KUHF. The UC Games Room will remain open throughout the night and food will be available. Radio and TV personalities will also be on hand throughout the night to cheer the dancers on, according to Brownstein.

Prizes will be awarded to the team that raises the most money, as well as to the teams that dance all 25 hours.

The money raised by pledges and individual donations will be combined with the proceeds from Casino Night and will be used for scholarships for Camp Cougar, a summer residential camp for retarded children.

"We're kind of excited about it (the dance-a-thon). The idea behind it is, of course, to raise money for the camp, but it also serves another purpose. It's one of the few activities where UH students, whether they're dorm students or not, can get together to do something for someone else, and yet still have fun," Brownstein said.

"Another thing that we're proud of is the fact that the money goes for scholarships, and not to pay for salaries," Brownstein remarked.

Last year the dance-a-thon raised approximately $2,000 and the money sponsored 60 children in the program. This year's goal is $2,500, and will be used to defray the costs of Camp Cougar, scheduled for the first three weeks in June.

The camp is co-sponsored by the Mental Health and Mental Retardation Association, the Houston Association for Retarded Citizens and the UH residence halls. "We believe that it's the only camp in the country that is held on a college campus," Brownstein said.

In addition, the counselors are UH students. "The beautiful thing about the camp is that the kids get a chance to be away from home for a while, to get away from the inner city. The counselors benefit too. It's a very rewarding experience, and the dance-a-thon makes it possible for a lot of these kids to come," Brownstein said.

Information on the dance-a-thon can be obtained by calling 749-3351. To find out more about Camp Cougar, contact Ken Jung at 749-4506.

Layering saves plants

Air layering is a propagation method used on single-stalked plants such as rubber plants, dieffenbachias, fiddle-leaf figs and dracaenas. It also is a way of reducing the length of a plant's stem to improve its appearance.

It consists of making a cut that goes deep into the stem's growing tissue, but does not sever the branch entirely from the parent plant. Roots will form where the stem is cut.

Meanwhile, enough nourishment continues to flow through the uncut section of the stem to keep the half-severed top alive.

To make the incision, the knife being used should pass through the center of the stalk and the blade should show through on the other side. Remove the knife and scrape a small portion of skin from the outer plant, above and below the cut. At this point, take care not to remove this outer layer the entire way around the stem for complete peeling here kills the growth above it.

Now insert something into the cut to keep it open, such as a wooden matchstick or toothpick.

Moist sphagnum moss is next used to wrap the area and provide a growth medium for the new plant. Tie the moss to the stem with a string if necessary, then wrap a sheet of plastic tightly around the moss and secure it with tape. The moss must be kept moist at all times to assure proper root development. Add additional water to the plastic pouch when it dries out.

Within eight weeks a strong root system will develop in the moss, and soon begin to break through the plastic. At this time remove the tape and wrapping material.

Cut through the stem just below the new roots and pot the top portion in all-purpose potting mix.

Low-speed chase headache for cops

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP)—Eighty-year-old Leo F. Green was in the Monroe County Jail Tuesday, awaiting court action on charges that he led two police cruisers on a 15-mile low-speed chase.

Police in suburban Webster said the chase began late Monday afternoon when Officer Marshall Tobin noticed an expired inspection sticker on a car and decided to pull it over.

Police said the driver just kept on going. Tobin, according to police, radioed for help and another police car joined the chase.

"It wasn't really a chase," a Webster officer said. "The speeds never got over 45 miles per hour. He just wouldn't stop."

Finally, police said, Green's auto collided with a Coast Guard van and limped along for another mile before a fire in the engine compartment brought it to a halt. Then, according to police, Green refused to get out of his car and had to be forcibly removed.

Nobody was injured, but Green now faces charges of first-degree reckless endangerment, reckless endangerment of property, resisting arrest and violations of the vehicle and traffic laws.

Life Is No Game

There is a popular theory today that promotes the idea that life is a game, and that proper living is proper games playing. According to the author of this theory, each situation of life can be compared to games and can be handled by playing that game correctly. When I was a child, I was very good at games. It never really mattered to me if they were outdoor or indoor games. I was happiest when it was playtime. Of course, I preferred to win all the games that I played.

By the time I had graduated from college, I was an expert games player in other "real life" situations. For example, I had learned such games as "how to handle Mom and Dad;" "how to snow people;" and "how to behave at work." My games often fooled people, deceived and hurt people. Unfortunately I was addicted and couldn't stop.

I was also a great believer in the mottoes "fair play" and "no cheating." But I never thought that telling lies broke any rules. I could be very "truthful" to others and very "untruthful" with and about myself. I would speak the absolute truth to others, no matter how painful it was to them to hear, but would be offended if they spoke the truth to me. My game rules were always elastic. I could bend them at will in order to do as I pleased. This same courtesy was never extended to my fellow contestants because the first rule of all my games was self preservation.

As I grew older, I found it harder to break the habits learned earlier in my life. Games playing was a way of living with myself and with others. As a way of life, however, it left me dissatisfied and empty. I never learned or grew any from the mistakes I made because I never admitted making them. It was always easier to find someone else to blame for my short comings.

One day, a fellow worker who also happened to be a Christian spoke to me about Jesus Christ. She told me that He was the answer to all my inner seeking. At the time her words made sense to me because I was emotionally, physically and spiritually exhausted. Outwardly, I gave the impression of self satisfaction, but inwardly I had a burning desire to know and experience God. Some months earlier, I had run out of games to play.

In the past, I had ignored these deep hungers for a base of reality in my life, but I never rid myself of them. Inside me, where few eyes penetrated, was a person who was appalled by life's pitfalls and problems. My heart hurt and like the psalmist I would continually raise my eyes up to the hills and look for salvation.

That day two years ago, I verbalized my feelings to my Christian co-worker, who shared with me all the riches of Christ. We exchanged more than thoughts, ideas, and feelings that day. We shared Christ. Something of the faith she possessed in the Lord Jesus was infused into me.

Suddenly I felt a heavy burden being lifted. I realized that all the games I had played in my life had been a trap with too many rules to remember. I wanted the same Christ to dwell in my heart and human spirit. We did not pray together as people do at Christian "revivals" but I prayed to the Lord later. In private I prayed for deliverance. I told him about myself and I might have told him: "Lord, if you could, you could save me."

Each day my past longings to know God and to enjoy Him are fully met. I thank God that He created me and breathed into me His Spirit of Life. My life in Jesus Christ and His Life in me has really only begun, yet I know it's not a game with Him. To me reality of life is not a game. It is One, precious Person, who is always real and fresh in my experiences of Him! This living Christ is meant to be enjoyed and experienced by every human being because . . .

"In Him was life; and the life was the light of men. . . . But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." (John 1:4, 12)

Is it crazy to love marker pens that give you the smoothest, thinnest line in town...and feel so right in your hand? Is it mad to worship pens with clever little metal "collars" to keep their plastic points from getting squishy?

Not if the pen is a Pilot marker pen.

Our Razor Point, at only 69¢, gives the kind of extra-fine delicate line you'll flip over. And for those times you want a little less line, have a fling with our fine point 59¢ Fineliner. It has the will and fortitude to actually write through carbons.

UH, Bearkats split twinbill

By DAVID MUNDY
Sports Editor

Sam Houston pitcher Nathan Partain walked UH's Jeff Brockway with the bases loaded in the top of the 10th inning to give UH a 6-5 win and earn the Cougars a split of their baseball doubleheader Tuesday at Sam Houston State University. UH pitcher Tom Lukish struck out five Sam Houston State batters in three and two-thirds innings after relieving starter Billy Blum to pick up the win.

Right fielder Donnie Lopez had put UH in the lead after tying the game in the fourth with a homer by scoring from first on Gary Weiss' triple in the sixth. He then tacked on an insurance run in the seventh with a bases-loaded sacrifice fly to give UH a 5-3 lead going into the bottom of the seventh.

Blum, who had limited the Bearkats to four hits and three runs, two unearned, through the first six innings, got into trouble when Bearkat pinch hitter Tommy Knox singled and shortstop Rick Voltz doubled. Knox scored on a fielder's choice on a ground out by Steve Hume to UH second baseman Weiss, and Voltz came home on a long double by third baseman Glenn Wilson. UH coach Roland Walton then called in Lukish, who intentionally walked Harold Epps and got left fielder Joe Meza on a grounder.

Lukish then retired the next seven Sam Houston batters to face him before Epps broke the string with a single in the bottom of the 10th. However, Russell Donham was caught stealing second base while pinch running for Epps, and Lukish got Meza swinging for the final out as darkness settled over the Sam Houston field.

Lukish picked up his fourth win of the season against an equal number of losses, while Brian Gilbreath, now 0-2, was the loser for Sam Houston.

UH had battled back from a four-run deficit in the first game to tie it up at 5-5 in the top of the seventh on a bases-loaded infield single by Donnie Randell. Sam Houston won it in the bottom of the inning, however, when Terry Byrum's throw to first baseman Donnie Lopez on the second end of a double play was too late and Knox scored from third. John Shannon picked up the loss in relief of starter Alec McCullock, who had surrendered four runs to the Bearkats in the first inning.

With the split of the non-conference doubleheader, UH's record moves to 19-14 for the season. The Cougar junior varsity team will play San Jacinto Junior College today at Galena Park, while the varsity will be in Fort Worth for a three-game series with TCU Friday and Saturday.

Benner

Ex-Cougar Benner signs pro contract

By PAUL MARCUS
Sports Writer

"Even when I put on my uniform with my name on the back, I still can't believe it." This is what former Cougar soccer player David Benner says about joining Houston's professional soccer club, the Hurricane.

Benner's excitement is evident when he talks about his opportunity. "Playing soccer has been my lifetime dream. And what better way than to play for my hometown team?" he says.

Benner, who was born in Houston, started playing soccer in high school in Irving, Texas. He says the reason he started was that while in the school band he felt he needed some exercise. So he tried soccer and, he says, fell in love with it.

Benner came to UH in 1974, where he helped lead the soccer team to their first Texas Collegiate Soccer League championship the next year. During that season, Benner had a stretch of 10 games in which he allowed only four goals. His goals-against average over his three-and-a-half year stay was .6 goals per game. He also had 20 shutouts in the 34 games he played.

According to Benner, a lot of credit for his success goes to the coach of the UH soccer club, Bill Psifidis. "He was definitely a great asset. He took the time I needed to drill me. He also pushed me into the tryout the Hurricane held," Benner says.

Psifidis remembers Benner as a fellow who had the desire and the drive to make himself a good player. "I had Benner for three-and-a-half years. When he came he had the fundamentals—all I did was work on his technique. He had a very good attitude. He even worked hard when he was injured."

Soccer is a rather unique sport in that a player like Benner can sign a contract and still keep his amateur status. His contract pays him $50 a month plus room and board. The contract also will allow him to try out for the U.S. Olympic team. Benner says that this was the kind of contract he wanted because "it allows me to gain experience while I'm able to look at the future."

Benner realizes that he has a lot of competition on the Hurricane for the goalkeeper's job. In fact, he says he expects to spend at least the first month on the bench. He feels, however, that he can learn a lot from Keith Van Eron and Roland Sikinger.

"I just gave soccer a try," Benner says, "and look what it's done for me. I think it will catch on big here in Houston."

Wildcats win CAA crown

LOUIS (AP)—Explosive Jack Givens, finally finding seams in the Duke zone, hit a near record 41 points Monday night, Kentucky's pressure-proof Wildcats roared to a 48-48 victory over the Blue Devils in the championship game of the 40th NCAA basketball tournament.

In the consolation game, Arkansas took third place by beating Notre Dame 71-69 on Ron Overton's turn-around jumper from the top of the key at the final buzzer.

The Wildcats, playing under what Coach Joe B. Hall called the most intense pressure of his six-year career at Kentucky, clinched their fifth national title behind a brilliant one-man show by the 6-foot-4-inch senior.

The left-handed Givens scored 23 of his points in the first half to power the nation's No. 1 team to a 45-38 lead at intermission, then continued his one-man assault on the basket in the second half. Givens sank three baskets during an 11-2 run, as the Wildcats moved into a 66-50 lead with 12:42 left in the game. That mountainous lead was enough for Kentucky to withstand a flurry by the Atlantic Coast Conference playoff champions, who fought back valiantly but could get no closer than four points. In his team leading by seven points, Hall had to substitute. Then, finding his team's lead slowly eroding, he had to let his regulars play to the game.

The Wildcats' performance was just three points off the record for an NCAA Championship game set by Bill Walton, who scored 44 points for UCLA in this same building against Memphis State in 1973.

A crowd of 18,721 gave Givens a standing ovation, roaring his nickname "Goose" as the Kentucky forward left the game with 28 seconds remaining. He later returned with the rest of the starters.

The Blue Devils made a frantic rally near the end of the game and cut Kentucky's once formidable lead to 92-86 after Hall had removed his starters from the lineup in the last half-minute.

Charles Denner eyes a girl besides his companion in a very typical scene from Francois Truffaut's new film, "The Man

Truffaut scores with 'Man'

By H. N. GRAHAM
Arts and Amusements Writer

THE MAN WHO LOVED WOMEN

Director: Francois Truffaut; writers: Francois Truffaut, Michel Fermaud, and Suzanne Schiffman; from Cinema 5; in French with English subtitles; exclusively at the Greenway 3.

The newest film by Francois Truffaut, "The Man Who Loved Women," is another one of his supremely delicate and gentle comedies that embraces serious themes underneath the narrative gentleness of Truffaut's story.

The main character is played by Charles Denner. Bertrand is a middle-aged man locked into the pursuit of women, a pursuit that he has taken to the edge of obsession.

He becomes fascinated by the legs of a woman, gets her address and smashes the front of his car to have pretext to track her down. At another point a woman who is a future conquest tells him that he asks a woman out "as if your life depended on it."

As in all Truffaut's films the story is told in a way that doesn't put Bertrand down or make him the victim of some cheap laughs. Truffaut just sets down, to the best of his understanding, characters and their problems.

As a subplot of the movie, Bertrand is writing a book on his conquests, and the portrayal of how a writer creates, out of an honest appraisal of himself, is an economical method of presenting information about Bertrand directly—possibly the best portrayal of the act of creation in film.

Sadly, Bertrand gains the self-knowledge of who he is and why he started the novel, but not the strength to change himself, although he was changing slightly through the knowledge he was gaining.

The film begins and ends with Bertrand's funeral, for he was struck down as he ran across a busy street, fascinated by a pair of legs that had whisked into a shop.

Charles Denner is perfect as Bertrand. Usually it is hard to judge the quality of a performance through a language barrier, but the brilliance of the work Denner does can be seen even if you've never heard French before.

Also good, as the various women in his life, are Leslie Caron as the one mystery woman in Bertrand's life; Nelly Borgeaud as a woman who shoots her husband to be with Bertrand but ends up in jail; and, especially, Brigitte Fossey as one of the editors of Bertrand's book who becomes quite wrapped up in him, despite, or maybe because of, his faults.

An exceptional movie, and thoroughly enjoyable.

Cloning for Jesus

It had certainly been a bad morning, what with getting to sleep around 6 a.m. and forgetting all of my food money. It's the sort of morning when you look out of your window, choke on some early morning phlegm, and stumble into the bedroom finally, cursing yourself and everything else for being too bright or making too much noise or just being there.

I think that is why I was so prepared when "it" came into my possession. Someone had informed me earlier that my eyes were looking pretty bloodshot, that I was not acting very coherently, and that my typically surly and snide attitude was heading toward the violence zone. What frame of mind could be better for finding out about a novel about making a clone of Jesus from what was supposedly one of his bones found in Galilee?

This information rumbled around in my head for a few minutes, and it finally occurred to me that this was certainly the kind of story that America would take to its hearts. The story has plenty of violence, with Mormons, Southern Baptists and Catholics all assaulting "Jesse," or Jesus Clone. Let's just refer to him as J. C., shall we?

Apparently, J. C. finds as much opposition to his teachings as ever. And he should. Any Jesus with a name like Jesse who lives out of wedlock with a woman named Magdalena Kutzak deserves whatever he gets, as far as I'm concerned.

The author, Eugene Michaels, forged the character of J. C. from the writings of Thomas Jefferson, of all people, because Jefferson's ideas about Jesus being a moral reformer who would totally ignore all of the New Testament dogma and religious bureaucracy probably jived most consistently with his own.

J. C. is used as a mouthpiece for the Jeffersonian philosophy that stated that the modified Christianity of the church would eventually sully the morals of Americans.

All of this folderol, added to the knowledge that Little and Brown is bringing out a book about a guy discovering Jesus' bones and affecting papal policies, and a Lippincott publication very similar to Michaels', suggests that Jesus cloning is definitely in. Sort of Jesus-chic, perhaps. Just to get you off on the right foot, though, I have a suggestion. Get the jump on the fad. Read Tom Robbins' novel, "Another Roadside Attraction," which concerns the attempts of one John Paul Ziller and one Plucky Purcell to make known the existence of the preserved remains of Jesus. It is very wild and funny, and definitely the kind of thing you can put down at 6 a.m., bloodshot, and say, "Why in the hell is everything so bright and noisy."

'Swords' provides action

By H. N. GRAHAM
Arts and Amusements Writer

CROSSED SWORDS

Director: Richard Fleischer;
Screenplay: George MacDonald Fraser, based on "The Prince and the Pauper" by Mark Twain; producer: Pierre Spengler; from Warner Bros.; at multiple locations.

"Crossed Swords" is the kind of broad period film that supposedly isn't made any more. It is a thorough-going and affectionate retelling of Mark Twain's "The Prince and the Pauper."

The film isn't art, but it is bang-up entertainment. The photography, by Jack Cardiff, is crisp and lush, and the music, by Maurice Jarre, is perfect Hollywood-style film music, with hundreds of strings in the background.

In the dual role of Edward, prince of Wales, and Tom Canty, the pauper, Mark Lester is little more than adequate. He is helped along by some of the most remarkable matte work ever done. In one shot the two characters shake hands with each other.

Most of the fun of the film comes from the supporting players, all of whom try to be broader than each other. Charlton Heston as Henry VIII and Rex Harrison as the duke of Norfolk are the image of royalty. George C. Scott as the leader of a tribe of beggars seems a very engaging bad guy, and he looks as if he enjoyed himself while doing this.

The standout performance of the film is Oliver Reed's as Miles Hendon, who befriends Edward in his pauper guise and is convinced the boy is mad. It is refreshing to occasionally see how good an actor Reed is after several years of him appearing and doing nothing but sneering as villains in various films.

This film was made by the same people who did "The Three Musketeers" and "The Four Musketeers," with the exception of Richard Fleischer as director. Richard Lester, who directed the other two films, would have been just a little too arch to do this film, and Fleischer manages to catch the spirit of Twain, even though the screenplay takes some liberties with Twain's novel.

This is a very good movie, both enjoyable and unpretentious.

New program offers study of life and aging

By JAN RICH
Asst. News Editor

A new master of arts program with a concentration in life cycle and aging will be offered this fall by the UH department of sociology.

Drs. Zena Blau and Sheila Sheinberg, co-directors of the Life Cycle and Aging Program, said the program is unique in the field of sociology. Blau said the program is not limited to the study of gerontology (elderly people), but rather spans the whole life cycle.

A great deal of enthusiasm has been generated for this new program, Sheinberg said, because "there are programs across the country that specialize in children. There are an increasing number of programs that specialize in old people. This is the first program that takes a life-cycle perspective for understanding human growth and development in society."

Sheinberg said the program will encompass many disciplines. "A full understanding of the life cycle requires that all the disciplines cooperate in developing this perspective. We don't want only sociology students. We want students, for instance, from biology, history, anthropology and psychology so that they can bring to the life cycle a multitude of perspectives."

The concentration of study in life cycle and aging will be divided into three areas. There will be a research program to prepare students for advanced sociology training. A second category emphasizes social service and includes an internship program "to reinforce what they (students) are learning in theory," Sheinberg said.

The third program concentration includes social policies, planning and advocacy. In this category, the students can select an internship with an activist organization, or an internship-research project, with legislative bodies involved in forming social policies, Sheinberg said.

Lunch time in the patio of our La Rojeña distillery.

When our workers sit down to lunch they sit down to a tradition.
When they make Cuervo Gold
it's the same.

Every day at just about eleven the wives from Tequila arrive at the Cuervo distillery bearing their husbands' lunches.

Lunches that have been lovingly prepared in the same proud manner since men first began working here in 1795.

It is this same pride in a job well-done that makes Cuervo Gold truly special. Any way you drink it, Cuervo Gold will bring you back to a time when quality ruled the world.
