Hoffman approves governance studies

Pres. Philip Hoffman has approved further study of a plan to reorganize the University Council to include student representation. The unofficial proposal, formulated by Students' Association (SA) Pres. Jim Liggett and Faculty Senate Chairman Thomas Degregori, follows last semester's defeat of the university senate and is another attempt at creating universitywide governance.

The University Council is presently made up of 15 faculty and 31 administrators. University standing committees report to the council. "Most important issues go through this committee," Degregori said, "and the proposal would allow students and faculty to influence critical university decisions at an important level."

According to the study, the University Council would be restructured to be composed of the university president, administrators, members of the faculty senate and members of the student senate. All university standing committees would be part of the University Council and there would be faculty and student liaison committees.

The uni-senate proposal called for 50 faculty senators, 30 student senators, 12 administrative senators and two staff senators. The Student Senate and Faculty Senate would serve as caucuses under the proposal.

The uni-senate plan failed in November, but Hoffman called for another vote. Post card ballots were mailed to students, but the measure was defeated again in the spring.

Memorial rites set for late dean

Memorial services for Charles S. White, former associate dean of the College of Education, will be held at noon on Monday in the A.D. Bruce Religion Center.

White was a member of the university faculty for 24 years. All friends and colleagues are invited to attend the services, which will conclude at 12:30 p.m.

"We're confident that the general idea (University Council) will gain acceptance," Degregori said. "We'll work out the compromises and details and make it a workable plan," he added.

"We (the Student Senate) will not be giving anything up," Liggett said. "We will be gaining; it will give us a position in policy making," he added.

The Student Senate gave Liggett a vote of confidence Monday night before he took the plan to Hoffman Tuesday.

Liggett said Hoffman encouraged him and Degregori to continue to work on the draft. "We'll talk with various administrators and get their opinions on working out the particulars," he added.

UH sets orientation dates

By RUTH TEAL
Cougar Staff

Ready or not, here they come! Next Monday many incoming freshmen will have their first taste of college life as they attend orientation.

About 950 new students are expected to attend the six two-day sessions throughout July, Jocelyn Gilkey, orientation coordinator, said. She said a total of about 2,000 will participate in both the one-and two-day sessions.

The new "freshpeople" are offered orientation to facilitate the transition from one learning institution to another, Gilkey said. "Each aspect of the program is designed to ease this difficult time in a student's academic life. The orientation program utilizes peer teaching and counseling to minimize the problems new people have adjusting to college life."

In addition to the routine tours of campus, the new students will be shown how to read a class schedule, how to use the library and how to study. The academic rules and regulations will be explained to them, and they will be introduced to academic terminology and procedures.

Gilkey said the new students will also be able to register early for the fall semester.

Those who attend the two-day sessions will spend the night in the Quadrangle and will be conducted through "Moonlight Tours" of the campus. They will also play a game simulating the freshman year of college, Gilkey said.

Luncheons during orientation sessions will feature guest speakers. Those scheduled to talk include Marvin Zindler, consumer affairs reporter for Channel 13, KTRK; State Sen. Bob Gammage (D-Houston); Houston lawyer Richard "Racehorse" Haynes; Dr. James P. Clements, UH communications professor and John W. Wilson, Cougar editor.

Throughout all the tours, luncheons and games, the new students will be assisted by student orientation advisers. There are 30 advisers who have been through a training session that lasted three hours a day for two weeks, Gilkey said. They were drilled in admissions procedures, registration information and the structure of the university.

Communications skills were also emphasized.

"The training has been informative," Steve Roche, mechanical engineering senior, said. "I now feel I'm licensed to practice UH trivia." He added he was looking forward to making UH comfortable for all the new students.

Ida Wycliff, business education senior, said she was glad she would be helping the new people get used to moving around UH's enormous campus. "I want to prepare them more than I was prepared," she said.

IRS may nix fee increase

By PENNY KNOX
Cougar Staff

Student services, such as the UC, may be in trouble if the increase in student service fees is not approved by the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) when the nation goes into Phase IV of Pres. Nixon's economic plan.

Nixon's 60-day price freeze, which went into effect June 13, covers all levels of production and distribution of goods and services in an attempt to curb high prices.

During Phase IV prices will be allowed to go up, but there will be restrictions on price increases. Paul McCormack, spokesman for the IRS said they were not sure what the standards for Phase IV will be.

Phase IV is scheduled to go into effect August 13. This is also the last day students who registered early for fall can pay their tuition and fees.

Among the fees will be an increase in student service fees. This increase was approved at the June 5 meeting of the Board of Regents. Although this increase was passed before the price freeze it will still have to be approved by the IRS when the nation goes into Phase IV, McCormack said. If the fee increase is not approved the university will have to refund students the extra money they paid at registration.

Treadway Brogdon, assistant vice-president and business manager said if student service fees are not allowed to go up, "it would require some agonizing reappraisals, and the UC expansion and its satellite will not be able to open."

Brogdon told the Board of Regents the present rate of student service fees would not cover the costs of the expansion.

Council backs arena plan

By KARL DOERNER III

With the 13,000-seat Sam Houston Coliseum, the 10,000-seat Hofheinz Pavillion and the big daddy of sports stadiums, the 70,000-seat Astrodome, it is difficult to imagine Houston in need of a new sports arena. But the Houston City Council believes there's a need and is presently moving ahead with its plans to build an 18,000-seat arena in Greenway Plaza at a cost of $10.5 million.

The sports arena idea got going in December 1972 when city council voted to accept an offer of seven acres of land along the Southwest Freeway "at no cost" from Kenneth Schnitzer of Century Development Corp., owner of Greenway Plaza, for construction of a stadium for the Rockets and the Aeros, Houston's professional basketball and hockey teams.

Free land! Sounds beautiful. But a closer look shows that when the seven Greenway acres are transferred to the city and taken off the tax rolls, the city will lose $7,500 a year in tax money from the land. The Houston school district will lose $8,500 each year.

A tax loss for the city and school district didn't restrain our city fathers. With city council's approval, Mayor Welch hired two financial advisors, Wilbur Frederking and Thomas Masterson, to prepare a plan for financing the $10.5 million arena "without using taxpayers' money."

In April of this year, city council approved a plan presented by Frederking and Masterson calling for full financing of the arena through revenue bonds. Under the plan, $10.5 million worth of bonds will be sold with the understanding they will be paid off solely with revenue taken in from the arena's rentals, concessions, etc.

Approval of the plan came amid a warning from a committee of eight city department heads led by city attorney William Olson that the arena cannot be financed entirely with revenue bonds. The committee concluded there simply will not be enough revenue generated by the new arena to cover payment of all the bonds.

City Councilman Frank Mancuso, the only councilman to vote against the sports arena at Greenway Plaza and the plan to finance it, criticized sharply the rosy financial prospects for the new arena predicted by Frederking and Masterson. "What they have done to make this thing look good and salable to the general public," he said, "is taken away all of our clients that we have downtown in the Coliseum, the Music Hall, Jones Hall and Albert Thomas Hall, and forecast they will all go out there (Greenway). This is not true. If this did happen, how are we going to pay for these facilities over here (downtown)? They were built with revenue bonds also, and we're still paying them off."

An operator corporation, most likely consisting of Century Development, the Rockets and the Aeros, will be created to operate the arena. The corporation will act pretty much as a private company, receiving 90 per cent of all net profits from the arena. The city will get the other 10 per cent.

The catch is, if the operator corporation should go bankrupt, the city will be left holding the bag, despite assurances from Frederking and Masterson the city will not be obligated to pay off the bonds. The fine print in the plan approved by the council says, "These bonds will be special obligations of the City of Houston." The corporation has a financial responsibility of only $500,000. Anything above $500,000 is the city's responsibility.

What are the chances of the operator corporation going under and leaving it all in the city's lap? Mancuso, a former major league baseball player, says professional sports franchises such as the Rockets and the Aeros are oftentimes very unstable. He pointed out, "Professional (sports) franchises move every day from one city to another.

Believe me, when they sign a long-term contract with the city, it means nothing. The Rockets cannot continue to operate in Houston drawing (crowds) like they have been. What if they decide to up and move this franchise to any other city or sell it, which they can do? Then, obviously these bonds would be defaulted. The city, in order to protect our bond rating, would have to pick these bonds up and pay them with tax money because there wouldn't be any revenue to pay for them."

The sports arena plan as it now stands is certainly a neat little setup for Century Development, the Rockets and the Aeros. They have everything to gain and nothing to lose.

But we citizens will lose no matter what happens. If the arena is a failure, we will end up carrying the financial burden. If the arena is a success, we will get virtually none of the profits. It reminds me of a catch phrase from my elementary school days: Heads, you lose; tails, I win.

IMPEACHMENT WHISPERS

Nixon stifles himself

By JOAN DUFFY

"Don't you go making fun of the President," Archie Bunker hollered across the dinner table to his son-in-law. "Ask him no questions and he'll tell you no lies."

That's one thing Bunker, the Senate Watergate Committee and the American people can be sure of. As long as Pres. Nixon remains secluded from the committee and the press, he can't very well perjure himself, but he won't be able to tell the truth either.

Up until now, the closest we have come to knowing the full extent of the White House's part in the Watergate and assorted political shenanigans has been told by former Presidential Counsel John W. Dean III.

As the ousted aide testified about high level conferences with presidential intimates; FBI, CIA and maybe even IRS links to partisan hanky-panky; and a huge enemy list a paranoid White House constantly updated the question was asked: Is Dean telling the truth?

If he isn't, he is a talented liar. Dean read his novel-sized statement to the committee during his first day's testimony, followed by four days of intense interrogation by the Senate committee. He slipped up once, confusing the Mayflower Room of the Statler Hilton with the Mayflower Hotel, an understandably natural goof.

Committee Chairman Sam Ervin and Vice-Chairman Howard Baker both said they thought Dean's testimony stood up well against the questioning, some of which was submitted by the White House. But Sen. Edward Gurney (R-Fla.) declared that Dean's statements were torn to shreds during cross examination. After trying to enlist the sympathies of Sen. Lowell Weiker (R-Conn.) and fellow Republican Baker of Tennessee, the White House has apparently found an ally in Gurney.

Much of what Dean said can be corroborated by others who Dean testified were present when Nixon allegedly made it known he knew what was going on with the Watergate and cover-up. But those who can back up the story are the ones most likely to gang up on Dean and discredit him—Haldeman, Erlichman and Colson. Some of what Dean said can be confirmed or denied only by the President.

His aides say Nixon's testifying before the Senate committee is unthinkable, yet Ervin and Baker and most of the other committee members are strongly hinting they want the President to talk.

Weiker provided the committee with a precedent for calling a president to testify. Abraham Lincoln once answered to the Senate when his wife's loyalty to the union was under question.

It will have to come to a showdown. Obviously, Nixon isn't going to willingly arrive at the Senate Caucus Room and tell all he knows. Neither is he likely to call a press conference and allow himself to be picked apart by the press corps.

If the country is ever to know how deeply Nixon was involved in the sordid political mess that now extends far beyond the Watergate, the Senate Select Committee will have to subpoena him.

Sentiment in the White House is to fight such an encroachment on presidential privilege and separation of power. Sentiment in the committee leans towards calling the President to the witness stand.

If the President is called to testify and refuses to reveal how much he knew about espionage aimed at the Democrats, why he urged the IRS to overlook tax audits on his friends, the necessity for the planned harrassment of citizens on his enemies list and other behavior unbecoming a President, the Senate will have to decide if he is the kind of person we want in that office.

Much about Richard Nixon has been revealed since Nov. 7, 1972 and that nasty word "impeachment," whispered in Washington after the cover-up fell apart, might get a lot louder if Nixon refuses to tell the people what they deserve to know.

Area boys play within the fence

By RONNIE WILLIAMS
Cougar Staff

A chain link fence, topped with barbed wire and lined with shrubs, might be an obstacle to some people. But the local children who want green, grassy fields and sprinklers to play in don't think so.

The fence surrounds UH Athletic Department practice fields on Elgin and Scott streets. Three boys, ages eight to 12, who were behind Hofheinz Pavilion Monday said UH practice fields are the closest areas for them to play.

"We can go to MacGregor Park, too, but it's pretty far to walk," the youngest and most talkative said. "We can swim there for free, too."

"I like to play on the fields," he said, "and no one runs us off as long as we aren't bad."

Two gaps in the shrubbery provide easy access over the fence, and in those spots, the strands of barbed wire are pulled down as evidence of the children's frequent visits. Jack Littlefield, supervisor of athletic facilities, said the children organize their own games or play in the sprinklers when they are on.

Richard "Rookie" Dickenson, coordinator of intramural sports, said, "The kids are no problem. They enjoy coming out and watching the big kids play. They help us quite a bit by setting up equipment, watching it for us or bringing it in. If we've got a game going, they'll quit their games to watch the older kids. Later, they'll go back and finish their games. We've got a good relationship with these kids."

"They're interested in the same things we are—sports, activity and competition. The only difference is they're younger. It's a good learning experience for the old and young. We have had no vandalism, and any theft has been so minor you hardly notice it," he added.

Littlefield said, "As long as the kids aren't out there when our athletic teams are practicing, we don't mind. Some of them like to watch practices through the fence. They have their heroes, you know."

A few of the neighborhood children who show an interest in sports are offered small jobs. They may help pick up equipment after workouts or games or keep the scoreboard clock, Littlefield said. "This isn't an organized program, and we can only use one or two kids a year. We make the effort if a boy shows interest and is too young to participate through his school program," he said.

"The fence was built to prevent coaches and players of competing teams from observing UH players during their workouts and to eliminate traffic that came on the field. Cars previously parked there during high school football games to avoid paying parking fees, but there are plenty of places for kids to get out on the field without being hindered," Littlefield said.

THIS HUGE WIRE FENCE presents only their neighborhood from the UH athletic field. a minor obstacle to local youngsters looking for a place to play. It separates

Sociology sets staff reform

Although the resignation of Gresham Sykes has left sociology majors without a chairman to confer with, plans for increased minority faculty and student placement on departmental committees are continuing to be made. These plans are being executed by the Sociology Organization (SO).

"We don't know where the department is going, but we want better access to information so we'll be able to act when it's in the best interest of the students," Tomas Garcia, sociology senior, said.

"We no longer meet with Sykes and there is not an interim chairman. As soon as we get a figurehead, we'll meet with him," Garcia continued.

SO, formed last spring, is a confederation of students. They circulated petitions asking that every other faculty member be of a minority race or sex, Louis LeBlanc, graduate student in sociology, said. He added that the organization supplied Sykes with a list of minorities who would be eligible for faculty positions, but three whites were hired.

"I personally suspect Sykes had no intention of doing more than contacting those on the list," Garcia said. "We were acting in good faith that he would do more."

The group of sociology students is also attempting to place undergraduate students on all departmental committees.

LeBlanc said SO wants both graduate and undergraduates on the committees so students can elect their own representatives. Placement on these committees would allow students to voice opinions on departmental matters, Irma Soto, sociology junior, said.

In the past, only graduate students have been allowed on these committees, Garcia said.

About 30 students are actively involved in SO, LeBlanc said, but many more students support the group. SO meets every other Sunday throughout the summer. Contact Sara McLanahan, 528-7223, for more information.

Senate vote changes control of equipment

In an 8 to 10 roll call vote Monday night, the Student Senate decided to transfer the video equipment formerly administered by Student Media Association (SMA) to Program Council (PC).

After several months of indecision about what to do with the equipment, it came down to two choices, Sen. Rick Fine (A&S), said. The Students' Association (SA) could transfer the equipment to PC or to the UC.

"The Senate has steered away from its past approach of trying to make the equipment available to rank and file students. The SMA was the epitome of trying to put the equipment in students' hands, and it failed; the equipment gathered dust," Fine said. "By giving it to PC, students will maintain use of the equipment through PC's programming."

In order for the transfer of the video machinery to be complete, PC needs to formally agree (in writing) to accept the equipment, Fine said. Once this is done, the executive branch of SA and a PC representative will have to ask the property management office to transfer the serial numbers of the equipment from SA's responsibility to that of PC's.

Gay Lib's Tony, Bill can't legalize license

Bill and Tony Molina, a male couple married in October, are still working to have their marriage license registered by the Wharton County clerk.

Talking to Dr. James McCary's "Marriage, Family and Sex" class last week, the homosexuals answered students' questions about their life together.

Bill is a female impersonator who imitates singer Vikki Carr. Tony is a former football player who has recently opened his own company of wallpaper specialists.

Bill said the rumor that their marriage has been annulled is false. He said a 15-page law brief has been prepared by their lawyer Richard Cross and issued to Atty. Gen. John Hill about the marriage.

License obtained by fraud

The legal objection to the marriage is that the license was obtained by fraud. However, Tony said the law brief contends the marriage was performed with no fraud committed because there was no monetary value attached to the license.

According to the Texas Family Code, Tony said, the marriage cannot be annulled because "the validity of a marriage is not affected by any fraud, mistake or illegality that occurred in obtaining the marriage license."

"The application for the license doesn't specify sex," Tony said. Once the license is obtained and the ceremony performed by a state official or ordained minister, there is no way for the state to annul the marriage, he added.

In addition to working on the legality of their marriage, Tony and Bill have been active in Gay Lib activities.

Last week Tony was a judge in the "Mr. Gay" contest at a local gay bar. The Molinas had planned to take part in the Gay Lib parade in Dallas Saturday as part of a national movement, but were unable to do so. Bill said Mayor Louis Welch refused to grant a parade permit for Houston's Gay Lib movement.

Commenting on the recent fire in a New Orleans gay bar, Bill claimed it was set by a heterosexual. He said that gay people in Houston collected about $10,000 to send for funeral expenses of the victims.

"Homosexuality is not a disease, but an identity," Tony said. "I am not ashamed of it, for I am not hurting anyone by it."

'This is my life. . .'

"If you hide behind closed doors you never get anything done," Bill said. "This is my life and I want to live it my way; no one can change me."

Bill said their marriage has been widely publicized because they want to help liberate the gay community in our society. He added he feels society is changing and people are becoming more broad-minded about things that deviate from the sociological norms.

Austrian scenery beautiful; Vienna permits diversions

GRAZ—Austria appears as almost a sister country to Germany, but the slight shade of difference is a most pleasant one. You sense a feeling of ease and calm among all the people. They work hard, but they play and have fun as well.

In cafes and shops, this is a slight problem, however. Waiting for a check or service can become infuriating here. But at the end of the day when you visit the clubs and discotheques of Austria, the difficulty is soon amended. It is almost another side of Austria—the side most tourists completely ignore. Young people seem very independent, very liberated and even mildly forward. opera houses. One couple paid $14 for front row balcony seats, one of the cheapest, so the Viennese opera is not quite as good a bargain as London's $2 live stage plays. The wine gardens which have now replaced the beer halls of Germany are not quite as boisterous, but are enlivened by accordion and guitar music. For about $5 each, you can eat a large meal, drink a glass of white wine and get live entertainment. The best wine gardens are in the village of Grinzling, on the outskirts of Vienna.

From Vienna, we traveled through the countryside, then through the Lower Alps to Graz. Graz offers little daytime entertainment besides a cable ride (or a hike, huff-puff) up the large mountain within the city to view it from above. A short excursion to the stables of the famous Lippizaner horses is a most restful look at Austria's farm lands, and one of the most memorable days in Austria. The horses are bred and trained in nearby Piber, about an hour away from Graz.

After recuperating from the early morning dancing and drinking, we drive to Venice and about a week in Italy.

The countryside of Austria is undoubtedly the most beautiful of all of Europe—the rolling hills, distant peaks and green fields give you a feeling of peace and serenity—almost as if you are home. Our first stop was Salzburg, the birthplace of Wolfgang Mozart and the site of the film "The Sound of Music," which most clearly describes the setting.

Vienna, the city of wine and music, is lovely, but somewhat large and bustling, as all the cities of Europe. We visited the city during a religious holiday and a spring music festival which accounted for the crowds. The Schonbrunn Palace, once home of the ruling Hapsburg family, is well worth a visit. The rooms are ornately decorated with gold-leaf and chandeliers. It is one of the most impressive European palaces.

MILLER

Navy commissions vessel named for black war hero

By GEORGE McELROY

PORTSMOUTH, VA.—The U.S. Navy commissioned the USS Miller here Saturday while the mother of the black Texas hero for whom the sleek anti-submarine warship is named watched with mixed emotions.

It was an occasion of sadness and pride for Mrs. Henrietta Miller of Waco. She wept openly as the ceremonies brought back memories of her courageous son, Doris (Dorie) Miller, the "Hero of Pearl Harbor." The 78-year-old gold star mother was enshrouded with pride as she watched the Miller "join the fleet."

Flawless ceremony

Amid all the pomp and circumstance the Navy could muster, the commissioning ceremony was near-flawless.

Asst. Secretary of the Navy James E. Johnson and U.S. Rep. Barbara Jordan (D-Tex.) cited the heroic deeds of Miller during the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor Dec. 7, 1941.

Jordan said many young men from minority groups are now enlisting in the Navy in large numbers. "They are finding a Navy where future Dorie Millers can be captains as well as cooks," she said.

Former messman

Miller was an officers' messman. He was stationed on the Battleship West Virginia when the Japanese struck the Navy's Hawaiian base.

When general quarters sounded that Sunday morning, Miller was collecting dirty laundry in the officers' living quarters. He ran to his battle station (an ammunition storage compartment) only to find it completely destroyed. He raced to the ship's bridge where he found the captain of the ship mortally wounded.

Rescues skipper

Miller, with complete disregard for his own personal safety, carried his fallen skipper amid a hail of enemy aircraft fire, across the flame-swept decks, to a place of greater safety. Then he grabbed an anti-aircraft machine gun and opened fire on the enemy planes until he was ordered to leave the gun post. It was Miller's first experience with such a weapon.

Later, Adm. Chester Nimitz awarded the Navy Cross, the second highest medal issued by that service, to Miller for "extraordinary courage under fire and distinguished devotion to duty."

Miller was killed Nov. 24, 1943 when a Japanese submarine sank the escort carrier Lipscomb Bay in the Pacific.

The USS Miller, a quick striking destroyer escort vessel, is 433 feet long and weighs 4,200 tons. Its crew consists of 17 officers and 228 enlisted men.

The keel for the Miller was laid at Avondale Shipyards, Inc., Westwego, La. on Aug. 6, 1971. It was christened by Mrs. Miller and launched on June 3, 1972.

McElroy, an assistant professor of communications at UH, was Dorie Miller's shipmate for 10 months before the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. He was a special guest of the Navy at last week's commissioning ceremony.

Undue harassment, student charges T&S

Kenneth Wooten, general arts and sciences sophomore, said he was subjected to unnecessary harassment when a Traffic and Security (T&S) officer stopped him on his way to the library last Wednesday.

According to Wooten he was walking across the parking lot past the Fine Arts Building when a T&S officer stopped him and asked if he worked at UH. After Wooten replied he did, the officer asked him for his staff ID. Wooten said he didn't have one because he was a student. "Do you work here or are you a student?" Wooten was asked. Wooten replied, "I am a student and I work here. I'm on work-study." The officer then let him leave.

"The manner in which the whole thing is handled, who does it, and how they do it is what bothers me," Wooten said.

T&S Inspector William W. Haner said it is the prerogative of T&S officers to ask to see a student's ID regardless of race. "We stop everybody."

Haner said it is often the approach of the officers when they ask for the ID that upsets a student.

Tennis pros to give clinic at Memorial Park Center

Tennis is fast becoming a battle of the sexes, and in the case of Cliff Richey and Nancy Richey Gunter, there's an added attraction—it's a battle between brother and sister. Tennis lovers will have the chance to see them July 10 through 13 at Memorial Park Tennis Center. The free clinic and exhibition match will be held each evening at 6 p.m.

Richey and Gunter are the touring professionals and program consultants for Woodharbor, a new tennis and sailing resort that sponsors the clinic.

The brother-sister team was reared in a tennis atmosphere. George Richey, their father and coach, has been a pro since 1947, and their mother Betty Richey has been a teaching professional since 1957. The brother and sister team began the game at a young age and since then both have put together an impressive list of victories.

Richey has captured several major titles including the South African Open Championships 1972, The Sugar Bowl 1964, '68, and '69, the Western Open 1965, '66, and '69, and the National Indoors 1968. As a member of the Davis Cup Team for three years, he was voted the most valuable player by sportswriters in the world wide Davis Cup Competition in 1972.

Richey's abilities as a pro have paid off well. He won $25,000 bonus prize for winning the 1970 Pepsi International Grand Prix, and in 1970 he was the third leading money winner in the world.

As the No. 1 professional in the United States in 1970, Richey has been ranked in the top five for seven consecutive years, and is currently ranked No. 2 in the nation.

Gunter collects titles

Gunter has been collecting titles since 1963 when she began her six-year winning streak on the National Clay Court Championships, the only player ever to do so. Her fame spread internationally when she won the French Open in 1968 and the Australian Championships in 1967.

In 1972 Gunter won four tournaments on the Virginia Slims women's pro tour three of the finals having been won over Chris Evert, and one over Billie Jean King.

She has also ranked as No. 1 in the United States for four years, and has been a member of the Wightman Cup team from 1962-69.

Gunter and Richey are the first brother-sister to rank in the first ten in tennis having done so from 1965-1971, and the first to rank No. 1 in their respective divisions.

Together they will battle it out July 10 through 13 in an exhibition match following their hour clinic. The event is open to the public but reservations are required due to the limited seating. Call 688-7701 (Woodharbor Offices) for reservations.

'Mistress' stumbles over unsteady lines

By ALLAN C. KIMBALL
Cougar Staff

The Windmill Dinner Theatre's latest offering is a comedy entitled "90 Day Mistress" starring "Playboy's favorite playgirl" June Wilkinson. The title and star might lead you to believe that "Mistress" is some rollicking X-rated comedy filled with bawdiness, its cast imminently in danger of joining the Deep Throat six, but such is not the case.

The only lasciviousness there might be in the play comes from Wilkinson, and then only depending upon your frame of mind. The play itself, while having some very humorous dialogue, could best be described as "cute."

Cute plays have about all the substance of cotton candy and "Mistress" is no exception. Wilkinson plays Leona, a liberated voluptuous woman who picks up men, seduces them and invites them to spend the next 90 days as her house guest. At the end of the 90 days, however, it's "Goodbye, Jack," and both parties are off to new, if not greener, pastures.

But the play makes strong arguments for marriage and against any kind of liberated image. The next door neighbor, a true bitch, turns into a flower of domesticity after having a baby. Suddenly she wants to do womanly things like "have a big kitchen." Leona, of course, turns out to be unliberated enough to fall in love and want to marry her third 90-day man, Danny (played by Frank Farmer).

Leona's mother Judith (played by Kathryn Eames) is a true career woman and therefore frigid.

As for the acting in the production (at the risk of getting a punch in the nose from Dan Pastorini), June Wilkinson's talent is in her bra. Calling her beautiful would be an understatement and remarkably built an injustice, but on opening night she lacked confidence and was unsure of many of her lines.

She shared this general unsteadiness with the rest of the cast as they went about tripping over lines like jumping rope. Dialogue which was obviously designed to get laughs brought few, if any, because of the bad timing and faulty delivery of the players.

The only actor who seemed to have the situation well in hand was James Weir as Rudy Avarian, an oversexed Armenian. But his role was short and much less demanding than any of the others, so comparison may be unfair.

It may also be unfair to discuss Wilkinson's heavily endowed bosom . . . but it's unavoidable. They dominate every scene as the first and last things you notice. With the acting below par your mind wanders every few minutes, ultimately coming to rest in the same place.

Perhaps it's an obsession that middle-class Americans have for mammary glands but the general topic of conversation among the tables at intermission was not the play itself but arguments over the actual size of Wilkinson's breasts.

Maybe everyone in the cast had opening night jitters and with a little practice the production will tighten up into a fast-paced comedy. But it's rather rude to practice in front of paying customers. The Windmill can do better than this.

COMEDIAN ROBERT KLEIN, a frequent guest on the late night talk show circuit, will be appearing tonight through Sunday at Liberty Hall. Klein has just released an album, "Child of the Fifties."

PLAYBOY'S FAVORITE PLAYGIRL June Wilkinson appears nightly in "The 90-Day Mistress" at the Windmill Dinner Theatre.

Duo wraps songs in spiritual mist

Most rock concerts have come to resemble huge religious gatherings anyway. Worshippers by the thousands make the holy pilgrimage to the musical meccas where they pay homage to their prophets and mingle with others of their faith.

With Seals & Crofts, who performed Friday night in Hofheinz Pavilion, the spiritual underpinnings are just more up front, that's all.

Seals & Crofts discovered the Baha'i faith about six years ago and it apparently agrees with them. Since that time they've moved on from a half-hearted rock 'n' roll band, The Champs ("Tequila"), to become one of pop music's hottest duos.

Now purity envelopes their music like a heavy mist, from "The Boy Down the Road" through "The Year of Sunday" to the inevitable "Summer Breeze." Each song is a model of fairy tale simplicity, all lulling hypnotic like Indian sitar music.

Propped comfortably on a pair of cushioned stools, Seals & Crofts perform their songs with relaxing ease. Jimmy Seals plays a nylon string guitar while peering out from under his everpresent peaked cap (he must, like Tom Paxton, be hiding a balding pate.) Dash Crofts, more flamboyantly dressed in an embroidered Western-cut suit and rose-tinted glasses, sings harmony and picks his unique electric mandolin.

"A mandolin usually has eight strings," Seals explained, "but Dash only uses four and they're very light gauge, so it plays pretty much like a guitar. . . it plays almost like a Telecaster."

Sure enough, Crofts pushes his tiny instrument through its distorted and wah-wah-pedalled paces like some miniature Johnny B. Goode run amok.

Then, to round everything out, Seals & Crofts eased into some jazzy numbers before closing (and encoring) with some good ole "foot-stompin', hand-clappin', hog-callin' music" with Seals scraping a mean fiddle.

About 300 people stayed after the show to hear Seals & Crofts explain the Baha'i faith and offer free literature. And I wouldn't be surprised if there weren't a few conversions.

Jethro Tull slated for two concerts

Jethro Tull, the British rock band featuring Ian Anderson, will be appearing for two nights, July 14 and 15, in the Sam Houston Coliseum.

The band currently consists of Anderson (vocals, flute and theatrics), Jeffrey Hammond-Hammond (bass), John Evan (keyboard), Barriemore Barlow (drums) and Martin Barre (guitar).

A new album, A Passion Play, is due out shortly to coincide with the tour. And two tracks, "Edit No. 8 and Edit No. 9" have already been released as a single.

Museum hosts free sun tours

Have you ever REALLY seen the sun?

The Houston Museum of Natural Science is now conducting free guided tours (by telescope, of course) of our nearest star at 10 a.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays at the Burke Baker Planetarium.

Within the Margaret Root Brown Observatory, a massive solar telescope tracks the sun on its daily journey through the sky, keeping it centered in view and sending its image through a special red-Hydrogen filter. As seen through the eyepiece, the sun becomes a fiery ball of glowing gas.

Distribution of tickets for the free tours begin at 9:30 a.m. the day of the tour. Reservations can be made through the planetarium and must be claimed by 9:45 a.m. the day of the tour.

'Live and Let Die' delivers Moore 007 thrills than ever

By DALE ADAMSON
Cougar Staff

The British representative to the United Nations silently keels over in the middle of a session. A man stands casually watching a New Orleans funeral procession that suddenly becomes his own as the pall bearers scoop him into the coffin without ever breaking stride. And a weird voodoo rite on a South Seas island takes the life of a secret agent. And that's all before the opening credits finish their roll across the screen.

It could only be another James Bond flick, "Live and Let Die," now showing at the Allen Center, Gaylynn and Memorial theaters.

Bond's adversary this time is the nefarious Mr. Big, a black underworld figure who wants to GIVE AWAY a billion dollars worth of heroin to establish his budding organization in the lucrative drug smuggling market.

Bond's objective—pursued through exotic locations in Harlem, the island of San Monique and New Orleans—is to find out who Mr. Big is and root out his master plan. Simple enough for Ian Fleming's super secret agent.

Roger Moore ("The Saint") is 007's ninth cinematic incarnation. Although a bit paunchy for the role, Moore has the right steely-eyed style and unflappable cool for the part. And, with his finely honed British charm and his boyish good looks, he's a knockout with the ladies.

Relishing joys of pursuit

But, as always, the meat of "Live and Let Die" is in the chase. Over land, sea and air Bond chases, and is chased, is trapped and escapes for a full 90 minutes of non-stop action culminating in a pandemonious motorboat race through the swamps and bayous (and, even, highways!) of Louisiana. The wholesale destruction of souped-up speedboats is a stuntman's dream and Chris Craft's nightmare.

One of Mr. Big's land-locked cronies careens his car onto a serene bridge to wait ominously for Bond and his pursuers. But a tobacco-chewing redneck sheriff pulls up behind him, "You picked the wrong parrish to haul ass through, boy!"

As the triumphant sheriff frisks his prisoner, Bond's boat makes a noisy jump and sails neatly over the road, followed by several successful and unsuccessful pursuers. When the smoke clears, the sheriff is alone...with a speedboat sticking out the side of his car.

Bond's romantic interests—with Solitaire, Mr. Big's tarot card-reading seer and Rosie Carver, Bond's infiltrated CIA partner—are merely interludes between the action. Time for Bond to take a breather before diving back into the thick of it all.

Another epic coming

And like any good movie serial, after the last baddie is disarmed (literally), there's still room for more—another Bond epic is already in the works and producers Albert R. Broccoli and Harry Saltzman aren't going to miss a bet.

They've tacked a small commercial onto the end of the closing credits that floats onto the screen as Paul McCartney's theme song fades into the background:

"James Bond will return in 'The Man With the Golden Gun.'"

That's 10 down and three to go.

B.B. KING is only one of the many great jazz and blues stars coming to the Astrodome Jazz Festival, July 13-14.

"GOLL-L-LEE!" Jim Nabors—actor, comedian, opera singer, dancer and variety show host—will be appearing July 5-9 at the Houston Music Theatre. He will be accompanied by singing and dancing Nabor's Kids.
