

From: Dolores Moncada
To: Guadalupe Moncada
Date: Unknown

[Page 1]

Mexican Scientific College

The tranquility of society depends on justice and the happiness of its members as well as the peaceful possession of their goods. Therefore, you must confine your heartfelt desires within the limits of moderation and let the hand of justice guide them. Do not cast a covetous eye over the goods of your neighbor or over the manner in which he may possess them. Rather, your neighbor's possessions should be sacred to you. May no temptations blind you and may no injury done to you incite you to violence, thus putting your neighbor's life in danger. Do not destroy your reputation, do not corrupt false witnesses [?].

From Dolores Moncada to her beloved aunt, Mrs. Guadalupe Moncada