UT merges three colleges

By CHRISTINE ATTAR
Staff Writer

University of Texas' regents approved a merger of three colleges (Humanities, Social and Behavioral Sciences, and the Division of General and Comparative Studies) into a single College of Liberal Arts last Friday. However, deans of three UH colleges which comprised a similar conglomerate college here until 1974 did not expect or favor such a regrouping at UH.

UT had a single College of Arts and Sciences until 1970, when it was split to form the four present colleges and a College of Natural Science.

UH, which also had a single College of Arts and Sciences until 1974, split it into three separate colleges: Humanities and Fine Arts, Social Sciences, and Natural Science and Mathematics.

Dr. William Hays, vice president for academic affairs and chairperson of the UT ad-

Schedules ready

Class schedules for the 1978 summer session are available in the registrar's office, room 108 and room 129, Ezekiel Cullen Building.

Early registration for summer classes will be April 25. Regular registration will take place May 17 through 18.

If you plan a vacation during the break between semesters, make it short. The first day of classes will be May 30.

visory committee, said there were two reasons for the merger. "The first is economic. The colleges are smaller than they were. The total enrollment has decreased. Therefore, the College of Liberal Arts would be smaller than it was formerly," he said.

All the UH deans asked favored three separate colleges. The size of a combined College of Arts and sciences would be prohibitive, they said. "The College of Arts and Sciences was divided because it was large and cumbersome," said Dean John C. Guilds of the College of Humanities and Fine Arts. "Humanities is still the largest college in UH."

Dean David Gottlieb of the College of Social Sciences thinks that a return to a single college would be "a great step backwards." He said that the smaller academic community produces identity and interaction.

Dean Hugh Walker of the College of Natural Science and Mathematics said that the separate colleges do a better job developing academic programs.

The deans agreed that an important tool to counteract the separation is the Liberal Arts Committee. This is a committee made up of the three deans and two faculty members from each college. They meet to discuss matters of mutual interest, such as curriculum and joint research.

Lynn free on bond; agent files list of charges

Former Houston Police Chief Carrol M. Lynn, arrested Monday by federal authorities on charges of obstructing justice, was free Tuesday on $50,000 bond.

Lynn, who is currently HPD assistant police chief, was arraigned Monday before U.S. Magistrate Lingo Platter following a lengthy investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. FBI special agent John McGauley filed an affidavit indicating that Lynn was involved in soliciting a bribe from former oil executive John Vincent Holden, who was found guilty of securities violations last January. Lynn was also allegedly involved in an extortion plot against Holden and his attorney, Gerald Birnberg.

McGauley's affidavit said that:

● November, 1977, Lynn approached Holden and Birnberg asking for $45,000 in return for fixing a case in which Holden was accused of securities violations. Lynn told Holden and Birnberg the bribe money would go to Leonel Castillo, commissioner of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service and former Houston city controller, who would in turn fix the case through U.S. attorney J. A. "Tony" Canales. Lynn said Canales owed Castillo a political favor, since Castillo got Canales appointed to his position through Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas.

● Birnberg later sent an associate to Washington, D.C., to ask Castillo why "anybody had it in for Holden." Immediately afterward, Castillo called Canales to find out what was going on. After receiving the call from Castillo, Canales contacted Birnberg, who then went to Canales' office to explain Lynn's request for a bribe.

● Jan. 25, 1978, Holden was indicted by a federal grand jury on several counts of securities violations.

● April 3, 1978, Birnberg was shot and wounded in the hand by two assailants in front of his home. Birnberg was hospitalized for about one week.

● April 4, 1978, an inmate at a federal correctional institute, J. L. Patterson, contacted Birnberg by phone, reminding him that involved university funds to purchase Government National Mortgage Association securities (Ginnie Maes), which at the time were worth $250 million.

The 30 SA senators present at the meeting also elected Sen. Kara Christian over Sen. David Patronella as the speaker of the senate. As speaker, Christian will have an executive position and will conduct senate meetings.

"I want to help all the senators unite despite political differences so we will become an effective student government," Christian said.

President Pat Powers announced that her administrative aide Lin Eubanks was researching the abolishment of student government at the University of Texas. "This research is for a response to a letter appearing in the April 10 issue of The Daily Cougar calling for the abolishment of UH's student senate," Powers said.

was to have been last weekend at Galveston, was postponed when only 12 of the 33 elected senators said they could attend. "Attending this workshop is very important because all of us senators have to properly learn our responsibilities, but the senate has started out by screwing up," Sen. Allen Youngblood said.

Youngblood then proposed to allow the executive committee (composed of the SA president, vice president, speaker and the committee chairs), to organize the workshop, for which there is $500 allocated.

Decision deferred on group's appeal

By MARK LANGFORD
Staff Writer

The UH Student Court delayed Monday night any decision on the Revolutionary Communist Youth Brigade's (RCYB) appeal of their two-year suspension as a campus organization.

Organizations Board suspended the group March 31, holding them responsible for violence that occurred at March 10 meeting of the ad hoc Committee to Support the Mine Workers in the Pacific Room, UC Underground.

RCYB member Kate Lombardi denied responsibility for the violence and said her group was trying to enter the open meeting but was prevented from doing so.

The Young Socialist Alliance (YSA) maintains that RCYB members provoked the violence by storming the meeting room door.

Student Court Chief Justice Butch Cersonsky described Monday's session as "unusual," since neither members of the RCYB or Organizations Board were present.

Associate Dean of Students Julius Gordon recommended to the court that no action be taken since a question arose as to the validity of the appeal. Without the presence of any RCYB members, the court could not determine whether or not the author of the appeal, Hirim Berry, was a true representative of the group.

The decision was postponed because of the importance of the issues involved, Cersonsky said. He gave the RCYB until noon, Thursday to formally adopt the appeal.

Berry said Monday he and Lombardi will represent the group and that they will formally adopt the appeal before the Thursday deadline.

The court did hear from YSA member Steve Charles. Cersonsky described Charles' presence as "a friend of the court." Charles said YSA does not feel the RCYB should be expelled from campus.

"It is detrimental for any organization to ban another organization because it would be a denial of their democratic rights," Charles said.

"Lynn was mad at Birnberg for having testified before a federal grand jury." This testimony apparently raised questions concerning Lynn's alleged bribe.

A meeting between Lynn and Holden was arranged for last Monday at Holden's home, and Holden was wearing a concealed transmitter. McGauley's affidavit said Lynn revealed to Holden that he had seen Castillo and his "hit team" the previous weekend in Washington. The "hit team" had allegedly been sent to Houston with a contract for Birnberg.

Lynn allegedly told Holden that a payment of $45,000 would keep Holden and Birnberg "from possibly suffering further physical harm." The affidavit said Holden gave Lynn $25,000 in marked bills, and Lynn said he would "see that the money got to Leonel and that in return for this payment, the whole thing would be put to bed."

Lynn was arrested Monday when FBI agents found the marked bills in Lynn's possession.

'Major' differences

By JULIE GIANELLONI

Since I have been attending the Graduate and Professional Studies Council, I have been constantly surprised by the lack of knowledge exhibited around the conference table. This lack of knowledge seems to me a reflection of the profoundly different experiences graduate students in different disciplines undergo, and the profoundly different regulations which govern our lives.

One time I was quite taken aback to hear a professor refer to GRADually speaking....

... is a column by graduate students and teaching fellows which will appear periodically on the editorial page this semester.

"his" graduate student. In my department, no one professor has control of a graduate student from the day he enters the department until the day he graduates. Rather, students work with a number of different professors before selecting one to serve as a thesis or dissertation director. Obviously in other departments the professor-student relationship is much stronger.

I, in turn, surprised some professors when I said that beginning TAs in Humanities and Fine Arts receive $350 (before taxes) for teaching six hours. Students in other colleges receive as much as $200 more for a similar or smaller work load.

The wide disparity in graduate student experiences seems in the first instance above to be a result of different disciplines. In the second instance, however, the disparity has arisen because there is no one setting policy for graduate students. For example, a memorandum put out by Dean Lawless in 1977 entitled "Guidelines for Employment of Teaching Fellow (sic), Teaching Assistants, Research Assistants and Lecturers," which is supposed to have established the minimum and maximum salary ranges, is being ignored in a number of colleges.

In light of this, the report of the Committee on Graduate Student Enrollment must be viewed as a step forward. However, the report recommends requiring all full-time graduate students to take at least nine hours of course work if they are teaching. At present, "university policy" requires 12 hours of course work; in fact, students are actually being required by their colleges to take anything from six to 12 hours. The committee report states that at present, the mean semester hour load for all graduate students is 7.5.

While I applaud the effort to standardize academic requirements, I also think that this issue must be looked at in conjunction with the related subjects of salary levels and amount of work required for those salaries. Asking an already overworked TA to take on even more hours seems absurd.

Politics out?

Recent infighting over the appointment of Yocel Alonso to the Student Service Fees Planning and Allocations committee could result in the first blight on the newly elected Students' Association administration.

Former president Keith Wade named Alonso, his director of information, to fill a student seat on the committee. The Student Senate approved the appointment 10 to four at the last meeting of its term March 27.

But Alonso's appointment and his right to sit on the committee are being challenged over a supposed technicality.

editorial

Two senators, Bonnie James and David Patronella, sought to kill the appointment the night of the vote by demanding a roll call to determine if a quorum of senators was present. Their plan was to get up and leave the room once the roll call began, which would have left too few senators in the room to conduct business. Vic Quintanilla, the outgoing speaker, says he simply determined by sight that a quorum was present, and took the vote. The number of senators who voted indicates that there was indeed a quorum of senators present.

After James complained, SA Attorney General J.R. Seeman told President Pat Powers in an advisory opinion that the roll call should have been taken. The SA executives are taking that ruling to mean that the vote on Alonso and all subsequent business conducted at that meeting is invalid, since the speaker did not "properly determine" whether or not a quorum was present.

All of that is old business. For two senators to use parliamentary procedure to disrupt a meeting instead of facilitating the proceedings as Robert's Rules of Order are designed to do, is disgusting. Rotten politics, like its counterpart in flesh, stinks.

The will of the former president and the duly elected senate was clear. If the new SA adopts this backstabbing and keeps Alonso off the committee, a bonfire will be in order—using a bunch of signs reading "Politics Out, Service In" that we saw so much of earlier this year.

With a new administration taking over in Students' Association, what areas or projects would you like to see get priority in the coming year?

BETWEEN CLASSES

Claudia Hall, biology freshman: I think they need to improve accommodations in dorm life and improve the way they inform students as to what's going on around campus.

Ramona Pace, civil engineering sophomore: I would like to see the dorm laundry facilities give better service, and have more washing machines for students living in the dorms.

Brenda James, pre-pharmacy sophomore: The first program I'd like to see SA tackle is the parking problem.

Connie Sterling, drama sophomore: The student parking problems—they are really rough. They really need some attention.

Darren Christmas, pre-pharmacy freshman: The first priority should be a revision or a clarification of the election code so we don't have the hassle we go through every year with accusations and all. Second, I think the students should have more information about the projects the senate is working on. And we should get the results—we shouldn't be the last to know about it, in other words.

Bob Graham, Art senior: I'd like to see the Students' Association expand itself into other forms of government other than just that little bitty political system that they're in. (SA) should act as a catalyst between all the schools, architecture as opposed to art, art as opposed to optometry. . . to find the common denominator between these different students and bring them together. . . so they can kind of have an overview of the whole system here instead of being cuddled up in their own little secure place and then going out into the real world knowing only one thing. Granted they know one thing real good, but they need to know other things to broaden their horizons. Right now that little bitty Students' Association as an organization is doing absolutely nothing. They go out and bust their ass to get votes and that's it. They ought to be people who can see broad horizons, who can see beyond the next political race.

Gary Scales, engineering freshman: I think the Students' Association should set new guidelines for the elections because it was a big hassle this year.

Sammy Word, pre-med biology: I think students should be made more aware of the programs they can get into.

Ruth Ryan, English senior: I think Pat Powers will be a good SA president because she understands the necessity of keeping the Students' Association together, which is what they need to do.

new Summary Torture in Iran 'common,' visitor says

From the Associated Press

JERUSALEM—Texas native Terry Fleener sent Israeli photographs and maps to Arab guerrillas "as an innocent favor," her defense attorney said Tuesday, asking an Israeli court to commute her five-year prison sentence and deport her to the United States. The three-judge Supreme Court delayed judgment on the appeal until an unspecified date.

Fleener, 23, of San Antonio, was arrested Oct. 25 and convicted at a secret trial ending in January of violating Israel's strict security laws banning contact with known members of Palestinian guerrilla groups.

WASHINGTON—President Carter told the American Society of Newspaper Editors Tuesday that he had not definitely decided to run for re-election in 1980. "I've not addressed that question at all," Carter said.

NEW YORK—Arkady N. Shevchenko, the top Soviet employee of the United Nations, remained in hiding Tuesday while a Soviet official sought to portray him as a problem drinker influenced by U.S. intelligence agents to walk off his job and defect.

A recent visitor to Iran told UH students that torture of political prisoners in Iran is still commonplace, despite statements to the contrary made last month by U.S. Ambassador William Sullivan.

Madeleine Lafue-Veron also disputed Sullivan's claim that the number of political prisoners Iranian dissident students claim are in jail, about 100,000, is "grossly exaggerated."

Lafue-Veron said she is interested as an individual in violations of human rights, and has traveled to many countries under dictators or military rule to examine cases of alleged mistreatment. She is a member of the Bar Association of Paris and the International Commission of Catholic Jurists.

"When Jimmy Carter was in Teheran Jan. 1, he said he and the shah had the same ideas about human rights. That is not a compliment to Carter," she said.

"I was very surprised when I went to Iran. I did not think such suppression, such a climate of fear, was possible. I have traveled to many countries that are dictatorships and never saw anything like it," Lafue-Veron said Tuesday.

Foreign observers are no longer allowed to visit prisoners, she said. Officials from whom she sought special permission either told her they didn't know of any political prisoners or said the prison was not a circus and prisoners were not on exhibit for visitors, she added. She said the government has created secret prisons for prisoners it considers most threatening.

Iranian people she met were afraid to talk about the government or prisoners, she said, and they would not come to see her or call her at her hotel. Lafue-Veron said she met about 40 persons, all of whom had scars or broken ribs or fractured skulls from encounters with SAVAK or police.

"People are not allowed to meet in groups of more than three people," she said, relating many cases of police breaking up religious observances and prayer meetings at mosques to prevent crowds from assembling.

TEX★PIRG

At the request of some lenders, the U.S. Congress is considering changing certain features of the Truth-in-Lending Act. The landmark law requires certain safeguards for consumers during credit transactions.

Lenders' lobbyists have coined the phrase "Truth-in-Lending reform" to describe their proposals. They argue that most consumers don't understand disclosures required by the law, and that "simplification" of the statute is called for.

A version of this Truth-in-Lending simplification has passed the Senate Banking Committee. Consumer group and legal-aid lawyers are, for the most part, critical of the changes.

Most significantly, the changes would no longer require lenders to disclose in an itemized fashion such "other charges" as registration and documentary fees. This means it would be difficult to discover illegal charges in credit contracts.

Creditors claim "Truth-in-Lending" forces complicated contracts to be drawn up. However, the source of these complications may be lenders who desire numerous contractual advantages over consumers, which of course must be disclosed under the law. The Consumer Law Center points out that some lenders have gained a competitive advantage by eliminating these provisions, and advertising "simple" loans.

Classes via video tape

By GREGORY BETSINGER
Staff Writer

Joe College ambles into the classroom, sits casually near the back and nurses his cup of coffee. Presently the image of a man sitting in an armchair materializes on four television screens situated around the room. A moment later the man speaks: "Introductory Psychology: The Basic Building Blocks..."

The man on the screen is Dr. Richard Kasschau, UH professor of psychology. Kasschau has been teaching psychology at UH for the past four years. Two years ago he introduced a unique teaching program at the university. Although the basic elements of the program are not singular in themselves, the combined techniques are.

His program utilizes videotaped lectures, computer-analyzed individual feedback to students and visits from prominent psychologists, all of which are designed to make the course more interesting to students. These three elements also make up the structure of Kasschau's teaching philosophy.

The first element of the program, video-taped lectures, consists of 60 half-hour tapes. Each day two different lectures run continuously for 12 to 14 hours.

Kathy Little, business freshman, says, "I like it (the taped lectures), and it helps me because I can come back and see the tape again if I miss something the first time." Naturally, Kasschau said, this is one of the taped lectures' major advantages. He added that the four sets are situated strategically around the classroom to provide optimum learning conditions.

Kasschau substantiates his claim by quoting results of an ongoing side-by-side comparison with conventional teacher-student interaction. He teaches his course both ways. He said the evidence shows students viewing the taped lectures consistently score five to seven percent higher on spot quizzes than do students attending live lectures.

He attributes the difference to "a markedly relaxed classroom atmosphere" and extensive use of demonstrations illustrating the lectures.

Kasschau said his favorite illustration is on a tape dealing with the subject of stimulation. In a segment of the tape, a television news correspondent is filmed taking a ride on the Texas Cyclone roller-coaster at Astroworld. The camera was mounted on the reporter's coaster car, thereby capturing the fear in his face and the trembling of his voice as he tried to describe the ride. The taped illustration demonstrated more precisely the effect of stimulation on a human being.

In answer to fears expressed that perhaps the atmosphere might be too relaxed and the programs too entertaining, Little said that she has seen students asleep at times, but that this is normal in any class. She added the system relieves the tension of formal lectures.

The second element of Kasschau's program is a computer feedback system labeled TIPS (Teacher Information Processing System), developed recently by a Duke University professor and made available to UH through the Exxon Education Foundation.

G-O-D

I was born in Laredo, Texas where also I received all the impressions of my childhood and of my early youth. The former period of my life was quite normal and joyful, but for some reason the years of my teens were very troublesome. It seemed as if entering into adolescence should have brought a whole new realm of positive experiences with a new awareness of life for me. But this was not the case. Instead I found myself thrown into the midst of an imposing and distressing world.

Assuredly the life of a teenager has never been easy and will never be, amidst the whirlpools of changing values and changing friends, the barrage of new feelings and outlooks. But somehow everyone else appeared, at least, to be making it through. It seemed to me, however, that all the hostility a society could muster up was directed right at myself. Slowly I began to retire deeper and deeper into myself. Having been a leader in my class for several years, I soon vanished from the scene. I parted ways with student government, the social life, and everything I had formerly belonged to. Probably by reason of my own inner alienation, I had less than 3 people in all the years of high school that I could call friends! It was amazing just how alone a person could be in the middle of a mass of people. I had no way of knowing if anyone else was thinking the same thing; I was only all too aware of my own gnawing feelings. As a result I soon became strongly attached to the one person I felt I could trust - myself. From then on my world consisted of Me, encased in My bubble, protected by it from all around Me. My fellow students I ignored. My teachers I hated. Indeed hate became the predominant factor in all my thoughts of those people I had to face day by day. It was my only weapon in the war of isolation. So rarely was a true emotional interaction conducted with another person, that it was with great surprise that a classmate might observe that I actually smiled! In those days the all-ensnaring television set provided an often-resorted-to refuge. It was only natural. In a world of harsh realities it was much more pleasant to sink into the imaginations of someone else's mind, as flashed upon the Tube night after night.

It was in such a condition that I first came to the Lord Jesus. Many years earlier in some of the very few Sunday-school classes I had attended (my parents never went to church) I had heard the Word of Truth. The Lord's name had been taught to me, as well as the most basic principles of a loving God. Now at the age of 17 this seed of truth still lay planted in my being. Fraught with disgust at my selfishness, seeking a ray of hope in the darkness of self-centeredness, I came to such a One.

Although my ignorance of all things pertaining to God was immense, it didn't seem to matter to Him at all. All that I knew of Him was that somehow He was G-O-D. I knew of no other way to communicate with Him except by those childish prayers they taught you, in which you thank Him for all those things you really weren't that thankful for. But I did that, this time with a hungry and open heart. Very soon my sensation was that this God, for whom I had cared so little, and of whom I still knew so little, was here! Not long after, I heard the gospel in a more complete way. I heard that this G-O-D had come to men in the person of Jesus Christ, that He had lived a human life, and had died for our liberation. Then He rose from the dead and was somehow here, and very real to me! It was such a Lord that I had sought and it was such a One that I received in the most simple way.

On discovering a new Life living inside of me, I was filled with a deep and lasting joy. I felt as if all the grime of those troublesome years had been washed away. The hate was gone, the misery of all that alienation was effaced. The change was very soon in coming and very apparent. Those classmates I had hated became my friends. Those teachers I openly insulted were now my heroes. All this was because Christ was more real to me than I could have imagined.

But the most surprising thing is this: I am 25, a husband and a father as well as a student. And Christ is much, much more to me today. He is not a good memory filed away in the archives of the past. Neither is He a religion, a mere creed, a byword for acceptance by the right people, or a convenient placebo for conscience. He is a real and living person, filling me with His life and making home in the depths of my being. At home He is real to me, in class He is alive in me, many times He is speaking in me. I have experienced Him enough to have all appetite for awaiting some "future blessed life" quenched in favor of a real feast today. Christ is the meaning of my human life and I am fulfilled in Him.

Program garners criticism

answer distribution graph. The teacher uses the feedback to emphasize areas he or she needs to concentrate on in the future.

Applying the feedback to his own program, Kasschau uses the graph to show him which lectures he needs to retape for future students.

"But the beauty of the whole thing is each student receives individual feedback as well," Kasschau said. The students are then able to visit a teacher's aide for help in their weak areas.

Kasschau said that the feedback programs have two interesting effects on students. "First, the students who normally drop the course after the first test have a much more defined reason for doing so." In other words, the students know if they will be able to pass the course, this fact cementing their decision.

Secondly, Kasschau has discovered that students in the upper half of the grade distribution do progressively better on quizzes as the semester moves on.

Kasschau uses a third incentive to make his course more interesting. At the beginning of the semester, he gives the students an option to contribute one dollar to bring any prominent American psychologist to UH to speak. The first exam includes a list of potential speakers and the students vote for one.

"Not only do 95 to 96 percent of the students consistently vote, but they also give a dollar when the time comes," Kasschau said. The students are not required to contribute after voting, and Kasschau pays any expenses over the contributed amount.

Kasschau believes his system could be the teaching innovation of the future. He will make his procedure available to other UH professors next year, subject to administrative approval.

"Approval depends on a number of things," Andrew Rudnick, assistant dean of students, said. He did not clarify what the criteria would be. The question of approval is in the hands of the Academic Computer Users Committee, according to Rudnick.

"I think the program is just a great thing for working with large groups of students," he said. "It is important that the program remains a mix for all three elements."

However, for all the advantages of the program, there are those who do disagree with the videotape method of teaching. Dr. Simon Moss, a UH physics professor, has expressed strong disagreement with the use of taped lectures.

Moss explains that the teacher-student interaction is vital and should not be tampered with. He acknowledges that he has taken an extreme position on the subject, but says that he only wishes to point out the possible consequences.

His point is very clear. "If the system becomes widespread (at UH) who will need professors, or for that matter, even universities? We could just send them (the students) off to a great hall and feed them information over a large TV screen like in 'Fahrenheit 451.'"

"Hell, you wouldn't need professors at all. You could just hire Paul Newman to come tape the lecture and do away with scholarship altogether. Madison Avenue would take over and the whole thing would become commercialized," he said.

Moss emphasized, however, that he was not quarreling with Kasschau's intentions or motives, but because of years of teaching experience he just doesn't think the program is feasible. "Audio-visual aids can be very useful, but aids cannot replace the teacher, for in the long run there will be a negative effect."

UH catcher Randy Abendroth decides he will try it without the bat during the second game of Tuesday's doubleheader with Sam Houston State. After not making contact with this one, however, he reverted to the old style.

SMU downs UH netters, takes conference lead

The rains came Tuesday night and the UH tennis team suffered their first SWC setback of the year to SMU, 7-2.

The match, originally set for Hoff Courts, was moved first to the Friendswood Racquet Club due to rain and then to Chancellor's Racquet Club in Houston. The second move was needed because humidity caused moisture to form on the Friendswood courts.

The Cougars, now 6-1 in SWC play and 20-6 overall, were able to win only two singles matches. The first was a win by Dennis Cahill in the No. 1 singles match over Jai Dilouie 6-3, 5-7, 7-6.

The Cougars' other win came when Robert Buchalter upset Tommy Cain in straight sets 6-2, 6-2.

The Cougars, third in the SWC standings, go against fourth place TCU in Fort Worth this afternoon in their final SWC round robin action. The SWC tournament is scheduled for April 21 through 23 in Corpus Christi.

Byrum home

By JIM MOLONY
Sports Writer

Terry Byrum drilled a three-run homer with one out in the ninth inning, and Mike Breslin won his first starting assignment as the Cougar baseball team took a doubleheader from the Sam Houston State Bearkats, 4-2, 4-2 Tuesday at the UH field.

In the first game, the Cougars entered their half of the ninth inning trailing 2-1. Shortstop Steve Kovar singled and moved to second when Donnie Randall's infield grounder was dropped by Bearkat second baseman John Tumlinson. Pitcher Don Welchel then fanned Randy Abendroth, bringing Byrum to the plate. The Cougar designated hitter, hitless in four plate appearances of the day, slammed the second pitch from Welchel over the right centerfield fence for his fourth homer of the year.

Welchel had entered the game with a record of 5-1. "He's always tough," Cougar coach Rolan Walton said. "We've seen him two or three times, and he's one of the better pitchers around." The Cougars had faced Welchel before but had never pinned a loss on the junior righthander. "When he's out there, it's going to be a tough game," Walton said.

Byrum started the game hitting only .203 in 11 games with three homers. "I'm not a home run hitter. I just try and concentrate on hitting the ball hard," he said. The Cougar freshman took a Welchel fastball over the fence in right center, just to the right of the 380-foot marker. "I wasn't trying for a home run—he (Welchel) usually keeps the ball low."

In the second game, Walton gave the ball to freshman righthander

Breslin for the first time this season, and the lanky hurler responded with a 4-2 win. Breslin went five innings, while allowing two runs on six Bearkat hits, three of them doubles. Walton felt Breslin "looked good. He was a little nervous, but it was his first start." Jeff Simons and Jeff Brockway shut out the Bearkats over the final two innings. The Cougars scored all the runs they needed in the first inning off Bearkat starter John Hoke. Byrum opened the game with a walk. One out later, Donnie Lopez moved him to second on a fielder's choice. An error on Tumlinson enabled Byrum to score and Lopez to move to second on Bobby Hollas' ground ball. Mark Alexander followed with a single, scoring Hollas and Lopez. The Cougars added an insurance run in the sixth on an error, a sacrifice and a run-scoring single by catcher Jeff Copeland. The sweep over the non-conference Bearkats improves the Cougar season record to 25-16 overall, while they remain 11-7 in the Southwest Conference.

Intramurals results

Intramural softball regular season ends this weekend with the Cougars not far behind. The Paper Chasers and Unregistered Pharmacists, led one and two respectively, defeated their opponents by 10 runs in games this past weekend.

Donnie Renfro won the Intramural Softball Championship last weekend at the Sam Park Golf Course. Renfro, member of the Independent Club division, scored 79 and 75 on the par 71 course to tie John Barnes of Sigma Nu won the championship division, and the OB Ranger team of Boston Bob, Donnie John and MacGregor won the title.

A rainstorm caused a washout of most of the tennis. Shane Snyder won the singles, and the team of Linda Berger and Gita Goudarzi won women's doubles. Completion of the season will take place this weekend.

An intramural swimming meet will be held Thursday afternoon in the Melcher Pool. All participants should show up between 4 and 4:30 p.m.

Track and archery entries are due Friday. Return entries to the Intramural Office (102 Men's Gym), or attend the Managers' meeting at noon Friday in the Atlantic Room, UC Underground.

The iconology of SD

Which rock band has used the William Burroughs icon, a gigantic silver dildo, for their group name?

You can give yourself 20 seconds on this if you like, but any more and you are abrogating the rules of the "Rock and Roll Intelligence IQ Test." Got it? Good.

If this bit of trivia seems a trifle obscure, it certainly is. Aside from a few AM and FM hits, this band has never been a household word, and if the household knew that Steely Dan was a huge prosthesis from a novel by a known drug addict who had all the advantages of his family's wealth (William S. Burroughs is of the adding machine Burroughs family) and still turned out to be a degenerate dopehead novelist, they (the households) would probably just burn all their "Josie" singles.

The Dan broke into the record rat race with a string of hit singles and a best-selling album. "Do It Again" and "Dirtywork" both had marginal success on AM, and Can't Buy a Thrill also spawned FM successes.

By the time the second album, Countdown to Ecstasy made its appearance, pianist-singer-songwriter Donald Fagen and guitarist-bassist-songwriter Walter Becker had jettisoned the band approach of the first album, deciding that their music would be better served by a constantly changing group of studio musicians. To this point, Steely Dan is, essentially, Fagen and Becker. Steely Dan is not a band, it's a songwriting team.

Their lyrics have always been the height of obscurity. The major steps that they have taken have been in the development of their music. The old Dan had a sound pretty well polarized at the rock end of the pop music continuum. With the albums Royal Scam and Aja, jazz influences have become more pervasive in the Dan ambience, and the lists of musicians have taken on the look of an all-star jazz session. Woody Herman is even including several arrangements of their material on his next big-band LP.

Last but not least, the band and their producer Gary Katz won an engineering Grammy this year. How appropriate it would have been to have presented them with a giant, gleaming Steely Dan, instead of the Grammy.

NOT SHY
Walter Egan
Columbia JC 35077

Walter Egan's last album, Fundamental Roll, was not a real success, even though it did receive moderate FM airplay. The same will probably be true for Not Shy.

The album is filled with 10 rock 'n' roll songs which could only be classified as ordinary, if not for the extraordinary help Egan had putting the album together.

Three members of Fleetwood Mac, namely Lindsey Buckingham, Stevie Nicks and Mick Fleetwood, guested on the album.

The Fleetwood Mac influence is glaringly apparent in such arrangements as "Sweet South Breeze" and "The Blonde In The Blue T-Bird." The Fleetwood Mac "touch of gold" is not apparent on these cuts, however. There is a difference between having a distinct stylistic influence and the ability to inject someone's music with that influence to generate audience acceptance.

Egan's lyrics, thoughts and musical punctuations are bolstered by Fleetwood Mac's musical presence, but his material wasn't strong to begin with. Not surprisingly, the best songs on the album, "T-Bird" and "Finally Found A Girlfriend," have Stevie Nicks co-vocalizing with Egan. Her harmonies are sensationally distinct—his voice is soft and restrained.

The album is characterized by a true blandness which is only sporadically eradicated by the Mac influence.

Not Shy is Not Good, either.

Ever wonder how a radio station is put together? Take it from the experts—it is all hard work.

The experts mentioned are the program or music directors of three of Houston's many FM radio stations. Larry West of KILT-FM, Michael Jones of KRLY-94 (Y94), and Leslie Rogers of KAUM were all interviewed. All had something different to contribute about the way their various stations are run.

Each station has a set amount of time per hour that is allowed for commercials. At KILT-FM, there are usually eight units per hour. Y94 also carries eight units per hour, but they only allow two commercials at a time to be run back to back. Y94 also has some hours set aside that are totally commercial free.

As Jones explained, "People will tolerate hours with commercials, knowing that some will be coming without commercials."

KAUM has different slots for different programs. During Weaver Morrow's early show, 11 commercials are allowed per hour. During the rest of the day, only nine units are allowed per hour.

Every radio station also has a establish a new image."

KAUM's Rogers explained their target audience. "We want the young people: mature, out of college, the affluent young Houstonian. We want the age group around 25 to 34—the consumers who have good incomes and who can travel."

Programming varies widely from station to station. Each station uses a different criteria to choose what goes on the air. West said that at KILT, the albums are judged by commercial value or appeal for the station.

KAUM uses three yardsticks to choose what they play. For one thing, they never play albums. For another, they play some singles from the '60s. Before any music goes on the air, Rogers says it must do three things.

"It must be a local hit, a national hit, and it must fit the mellow rock format used at KAUM." The guidelines used to make these judgments are the national hit-charts, computer printouts and local sales surveys done through Houston record shops.

Jones at Y94 said they were "trying to gear the station only to Houston." Every week, they survey 50 to 75 record shops to see what's selling in the Houston area. They are also trying to set up a research program by asking people over the air to send in their favorite albums and then "contacting them and getting their favorite cuts so that they can really be right-on. Each radio station has its own style, its own philosophy and its own method of doing business. But basically, all of them are after the same thing—the Houston listening audience.

Jones from Y94 put it this way, "Houston needs a radio station that is a little bit different from some of the others. We try to achieve here a fresh-sounding music station geared to Houston. We use a lot of listener input."

THE DEAN OF BEER'S QUICKIE QUIZ.

Q: "29.5 Degrees" is:

- The new book by Dennis "Credit Hours" Yeider, college student since 1904.
- The latitudinal coordinate of an area of unexplained phenomena known as the "Bermuda Shorts."
- The temperature of Aunt Gertrude's holiday smooches.
- The temperature at which Schlitz is Chill-Lagered.

A: Always (d) and sometimes (c).

Though 29.5 degrees is bad news for nephews, nieces and Uncle George, it's great news for us beer lovers.

'Cause Chill-Lagering gives Schlitz a distinctively crisp, clean taste. Which we academic types refer to as "great" to the nth degree.

To obtain reference material for the next quiz, consult the Yellow Pages for the name of your local Schlitz distributor.

IF YOU DON'T HAVE SCHLITZ,
YOU DON'T HAVE GUSTO.
